OCTOBER 1, 1887.

DRAMATIC ORATORIO.

When Dr. Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon" was produced, three years ago, under the above designation, considerable discussion arose as to the nature and propriety of the form adopted. This has been revived by the first performance of Mr. Cowen's "Ruth"—another dramatic oratorio, built upon the same lines as the "Rose of Sharon"—and, since some confusion of thought upon the whole subject appears to exist, it may not be unprofitable, nor entirely without interest, to examine the character and claims of works of this class.

Certain objections are urged against the dramatic oratorio; the most serious and important having as its basis an assumption that the real oratorio form is epic. True and legitimate works of this class, we are told, do not concern themselves with actual representation of events and delineation of character, but rather seek to "exploit" their subject by extracting from it whatever is profitable, at the same time deepening its impressions by grandiose treatment. They may be descriptive, contemplative, suggestive, heroic, but never dramatic. In combating this assertion, and, necessarily, the reasoning founded thereupon, we must not be understood to deny the epic oratorio. Taking the term in its widest sense as comprising all oratorio of a non-dramatic cast, it embraces works of the highest character, from Handel's "Messiah" and "Israel" to Spohr's "Last Things." But between accepting the sacred musical epic as a legitimate form and receiving it as the only legitimate form there is a wide step. Our contention is that the dramatic oratorio, as exemplified in "Ruth," has a perfect raison d'être, whether judged by its antecedents or by considerations referring to its essential character. It puzzles us to conceive how those have read musical history who, while proclaiming the authority of the epic form, call the modern sacred drama an innovation. As a matter of fact, there is little innovation—though there may be much that is uncommon—in even the boldest scenes of the "Rose of Sharon" and "Ruth." The very dances which so exercised the minds of critics at Worcester are but reproductions, without the smallest claim to figure among the creations of our daring and, in a certain sense, licentious age. Mr. Cowen's librettist is, no doubt, open to the charge that he endeavoured to set before the inner sense of sight a complete dramatic representation, and, to that end, made more than common use of "stage directions," scenic indications, and so on. But involved in this is no more than a question of degree. For the principle acted upon there are abundant precedents.

Variety of opinion with regard to the legitimate form and character of oratorio may, perhaps, arise from the fact that two diverse agencies have operated upon it ever since its introduction to this country. Handel, who founded oratorio amongst us, illustrated the action of both. From Italy he brought the idea of a sacred drama, differing from opera in very little more than the nature of its subject, while as a German he was perfectly at home with the narrative, reflective, devotional form so richly exemplified in the "Passions." How the great master blended these varieties, as when, in his dramatic oratorios, he suspended the action to introduce epic, didactic, or contemplative airs and choruses, every student of his works well knows. He gave us, however, only two oratorios of an epic character—"The Messiah" and "Israel," all the others being essentially dramatic, alike in structure and expression. Handel's own opinion as regards the legitimacy of works belonging to the last-named class is, therefore, manifest enough. A higher, or an earlier, authority than the founder of English oratorio will hardly be called for, but it is worth while to glance at the Italian source whence Handel derived his favourite form. Oratorio was born, so to speak, upon the stage, and nursed amid scenery and properties. Accepting Cavaliere's "Anima e Corpo" as the first genuine work of the class, we find it represented in action, with scenes, decorations, and all the then known appurtenances of drama, in the church of La Vallicella (February, 1600). Moreover, there have come down to us—some of them may be found in Burney (Vol. iv., p. 88-9)—the memoranda issued by Cavaliere as instructions for the proper ordering of his work. They are worth transcribing, as throwing much light upon the primitive conception of oratorio.

"I. The words should be printed, with the verses correctly arranged, the scenes numbered, and the characters of the interlocutors specified.

"II. Instead of the overture, or symphony, to modern musical dramas, a madrigal is recommended as a full piece, with all the voice parts doubled, and a great number of instruments.

"III. When the curtain rises, two youths, who recite the prologue, appear on the stage, and, when they have done, Time, one of the characters in this Morality, comes on, and has the note with which he is to begin given him by the instrumental performers behind the scenes.

"IV. The chorus is to have a place allotted them on the stage, part sitting and part standing, in sight of the principal characters. And when they sing, they are to rise and be in motion with proper gestures.

"V. Pleasure, another imaginary character, with two companions, are to have instruments in their hands, on which they are to play while they sing, and perform the ritornels.

"VI. Il Corpo, the Body, when these words are uttered: Si che hormai alma mia, &c., may throw away some of his ornaments, as his gold collar, feathers from his hat, &c.

"VII. The World, and Human Life in particular, are to be very gaily and richly dressed, and, when they are divested of their trappings, to appear very poor and wretched, and, at length, dead carcasses.

"VIII. The symphonies and ritornels may be played by a great number of instruments, and if a violin should play the principal part it would have a good effect."

Cavaliere's ninth direction has reference to the dances already mentioned:—

"IX. The performance may be finished with or without a dance. If without, the last chorus is to be doubled in all its parts, vocal and instrumental; but if a dance is preferred, a verse beginning thus: Chiostri altissimi, e stellati, is to be sung, accompanied sedately and reverentially by the dance. These shall succeed other grave steps and figures of the solemn kind. During the ritornels, the four principal dancers are to perform a ballet, saltato con capriole, without singing. And thus, after each stanza, always varying the steps of the dance, and the four principal dancers may sometimes use the galliard, sometimes the canary, and sometimes the courant step, which will do very well in the ritornels.

"X. The stanzas of the ballet are to be sung and played by all the performers, within and without."

Such was the first sacred drama with continuous music—the term oratorio is not found in use till 1642—and this was the model for many years, subject, of course, to the changes imposed by advancing taste, and by the custom which arose of performance without scenery, dresses, and action—"performance in still life," as it has been called. But through all modifications, Italian oratorios remained essentially dramatic. They were still sacred musical plays, "and such, indeed," writes Burney, "oratorios ought to be, even when sung in still life; as, when the laws of time and place are observed, the events of the piece interesting, and the characters well supported, the attention of the audience will be the more easily excited. Indeed, as these pieces are at present performed without action, the figures of the personages are not presented to the eye, as in other dramas, but the ear."

Handel's residence for some time in Italy brought him into contact with oratorio as understood there, and led him, in after years, to continue the line of great works in dramatic form. With the exception of "The Messiah" and "Israel," before noted, all his oratorios are on the Italian model, while some of them appear to have been written with the distinct intention of presenting to the mind's eye the effects of a stage representation. Take "Belshazzar," for example, as to which Professor Macfarren, in his preface to Novello's Octavo Edition, remarks:—"We learn, too, from this MS. that the musician must have had a completely dramatic, though not theatrical, purpose in his work from the curious fact that the descriptions of scenes, the entrances and exits, and the directions for the action, are as minutely written in the score as if the oratorio had been intended for stage representation." How far this is the case will appear if we give a few quotations. The second scene is thus headed:—"The Camp of Cyrus before Babylon. A view of the City, with the river Euphrates running through it." Scene III. is described: "Daniel's House. Daniel with the Prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah open before him." Later on we have "A Banquet-room adorned with images of the Babylonian gods. Belshazzar, his wives, concubines, and lords, drinking out of the Jewish Temple-vessels, and singing the praises of their gods." After this comes a stage direction:—"As he is speaking, a hand appears writing upon the wall over against him; he sees it, turns pale with fear, drops the bowl of wine, falls back in his seat trembling from head to foot, and his knees knocking against each other." Again, when Belshazzar exclaims, "Behold, see there!" it is accompanied by the direction, "pointing to the hand upon the wall, which, while they gaze at it with astonishment, finishes the writing and vanishes." Students of Handel know that "Belshazzar" is far from being an exceptional case. They will have "Saul" in mind, through which oratorio the action of the characters is minutely laid down. Thus: "Before an Israelitish city, Saul, Michael, Jonathan, David, etc.; a number of women meeting them." "Enter David." "Exeunt David and Jonathan." "David escapes by a window." "She shows him David's bed with an image in it." Saul "throws his javelin." "The apparition of Samuel rises," &c. What is all this but drama? What but the primitive oratorio very little modified as to construction, and here receiving the practical sanction of the greatest oratorio composer the world has known?

Having regard to the historical facts just set forth, we must be pardoned for again expressing surprise that the revival of the dramatic form attempted in the "Rose of Sharon" and "Ruth" failed of recognition as a revival merely, and came to be considered and criticised as a new thing, at variance with the true and original conception. Nothing is clearer than that, for a century and a half, from the date of Cavaliere's work to the death of Handel, oratorio was but another name for "sacred drama"; epic oratorio existing, in Italy (if at all) and England, only as a rare exception.

It is now necessary for our purpose to glance at some chapters in the history of oratorio as it arose and developed itself among the Germans. We have referred above to the origin in the Fatherland of a rival form, the spread of which to England naturally caused some confusion of ideas, and, as a matter of fact, must be identified as having no little to do with the surprise excited just now by the adoption of a purely dramatic model. In the first place, it is important to observe that, prior to the labours of Sebastian Bach, German oratorio was taking an Italian shape. It had a similar origin in sacred drama as enacted under the patronage and supervision of the Church, with, however, the important distinction that there was no stage representation, and that the subject remained limited to the Passion of our Lord. Amateurs who would make themselves acquainted with the purely Germanic development of the Passions cannot do better than refer to the works of Heinrich Schütz, now in course of publication by Breitkopf and Härtel. These mark a transitional stage, which completed itself towards the close of the seventeenth century, when we find Passions containing arias, chorals, instrumental accompaniment showing an approach to independence, and a freer treatment of concerted vocal music. With the beginning of the eighteenth century came a most remarkable revolution. Italian oratorio, like so much other Italian music at a later date, crossed the Alps into Germany and carried all before it. The old form of the Passion was simply annihilated. "It was, of course, self-evident," writes Spitta, "that the narrative of the Passion offered admirable material for a German oratorio on the Italian pattern, and C. F. Hunold at once set to work and wrote the words of 'The Bleeding and Dying Jesus,' in which not the recital of the Evangelist alone, but the Bible words and even the choral were dispensed with, and the whole material cast into one mould like an Italian oratorio. Keiser set this poem to music, and it was performed at Hamburg in Holy Week, 1704." This new form everywhere found acceptance, and the German public, turning from their own sedate creation, followed delightedly in the wake of the more stirring and interesting Italian novelty. Spitta describes one of the new Passion oratorios—Neukirch's "Weeping Peter"—remarking that "it treated, not the Passion properly speaking, but, as it were, a reflection of it." He goes on: "Peter and Judas Iscariot have both sinned against Christ: they are tortured by conscience, and Judas is driven by it to kill himself. Belial and spirits of hell would fain ensnare Peter too into despair, but the comforting words of John and Mary Magdalene, as they remind him of the infinite love of God, give him fresh courage to suffer, to endure, and to conquer. This work is, in fact, nothing else than a sacred opera; it even falls into three acts, or incidents, like an opera, while the oratorio usually has but two sections, and each act has a different scene. Scenic effects are throughout taken into account; thus, at the beginning, we are told: 'Peter goes, in melancholy thought, to a desert place, and presently begins——,' and, at the end of the first act: 'Peter goes off sadly on one side, and Judas, full of despair, on the other.' Besides these two, the following persons appear: Philip the Younger, Zion, Belial, and the allegorical figures of Despair and Faith. The first act ends with a chorus of youths, the second with a chorus of demons, and the third with a chorus of angels and the righteous. The work consists of recitatives, arias, and one duet. There are no chorals; all the verse is original. When and by whom the text was composed I know not. On the title-page it is said to be for devotion on the Passion."

Spitta refers also to the work of another librettist, König, who "called his poem honestly an oratorio, and further bestowed on it the designation, 'Tears under the Cross of Jesus.'" He adds: "We are told that these words were set by Keiser and performed, in 1711, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in Holy Week at Vespers. The contents actually consist of the history of the Passion; chorals are introduced, and, in part, the words of the Bible narrative are retained, though certainly in a very singular manner, for they are used as stage directions between the songs. For instance, after an aria sung by Mary, the mother of Cleophas, it is added in brackets, 'They that passed by blasphemed Him,' whereupon Mary goes on in recitative till, soon after, the words given to her are again interrupted in a similar manner:—

Great Heaven! and can this really be,
Can Christ, while hanging on the tree
Be mocked by all the scum of earth?
[And one of the malefactors blasphemed Him.

The malefactors now begin
To blaspheme Him who knew no sin.
[Then answered him the other, &c.

These notes were intended for those who were following the performance in the book of words, supplying the place of dramatic action, and König considered this subordinate service good enough for the Bible words." After tracing the further progress of this revolution, Spitta sums up as follows:—"Thus the German Passion had developed, through the influence of the Italian oratorio, into a very singular compound. The most ancient and modern forms stood side by side—the simple and the ornate, the sacred and the secular were worked out in juxtaposition. It had become possible by these enhanced means of art to appeal to the emotions from the most opposite sides. But it had not yet been given to any man to co-ordinate and amalgamate this mass of elements from a high standpoint—not even to Handel, who, by subsequently making use of all that was best in his Passion music for other works, showed that he was conscious of this." The man came, however, in the person of Sebastian Bach, who not only gave to sacred music a new and exalted style, but was able, by the force of his great genius, to combine the dramatic, epic, and meditative elements in one homogeneous work. But for him, it may be, German oratorio would long have retained the features it imported from Italy, and less readily have established the model which, with various modifications, Spohr and Mendelssohn worked upon.

We have touched as above upon oratorio in Germany mainly to show that even in the land of Bach, the dramatic form found acceptance and flourished for a considerable period. Indeed, the early history of this class of work in all countries has to do almost exclusively with that form and none other.

Should it be asked why, at a later time, the narrative and didactic oratorio came into fashion, an answer is not difficult. In England, at any rate—where oratorio had, for a long time, to battle against religious prejudices—the sacred drama could not fail to offend large sections of the community, and even the slightest impersonation of sacred characters was therefore avoided, sometimes, as in the case of Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," by writing a new libretto. Dramatic oratorio could only exist, under these circumstances, in a very modified form, and, as a rule, composers desiring to be safe forsook it altogether. Of late years we have seen the spread of more liberal ideas on this matter, as on all others, and now there is no reason in public sentiment why the sacred musical drama, discreetly managed, should not again come to the front and re-assert its original supremacy. The unquestioned presence of Mr. Cowen's "Ruth" in Worcester Cathedral was a sign of the times.

An objection has been raised to the performance of sacred drama in "still life" on the ground that it savours of the ridiculous when, for instance, certain characters are directed to make their exit, embrace, and so on, and yet do nothing of the kind. It seems to us that the argument is very shallow, because it assumes that the artists in a modern oratorio performance are, in their persons, a part of the representation. They are nothing of the kind. The performance would be quite as complete if everybody engaged in it were invisible, or if the audience steadily refused to look at the orchestra. Only the inner sense of sight is called upon for exercise, and that is guided by the stage directions. By the way, criticism of the sort that goes behind the design is always unfair. Apply it to the drama in any form, and the whole thing, as an appeal to the imagination and the artistic sense, becomes impossible. But the main point to be observed is that dramatic oratorio, as exemplified in the "Rose of Sharon" and "Ruth," marks no more than a return, under modern conditions, to the primitive idea. It is no new thing, and no innovation.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

On the 11th of this month the capital city of East Anglia will begin the twenty-second celebration of her Triennial Musical Festival. It will do so under the customary "distinguished patronage." The Queen's name stands at the head of the list with that of the Princess of Wales, and the Prince of Wales figures as President, while all the aristocracy of the district are associated with him in secondary rank. Then there is a general committee, headed by Lord Suffield, and comprising a host of local magnates, with a sub-committee, presided over by Mr. F. H. Gurney, to do the work. Properly constituted minds rejoice to see the local leaders of society thus freely giving their names to the cause of art and charity, but on not a few previous occasions we have had reason to suspect that the names are given and no more. May be the distinguished ladies and gentlemen of Norfolk will turn over a new leaf this time, and enable the "patrons' seats" at the performances to put on a more satisfactory appearance than heretofore.

What may be called the personnel of the Festival is not likely to excite much special remark. Mr. Randegger fills the post of Conductor as on two previous occasions, and may be relied upon to do his duty with energy and skill. In other respects no change presents itself; Dr. Bunnett once more acting as organist and Dr. Hill as trainer of a chorus chiefly drawn, we presume, from the amateurs of the locality. The orchestra consists, for the most part, of eminent London artists, and is sure to prove efficient. About the chorus we cannot feel so confident. The Norwich singers have never been able to claim a place in the front rank of festival bodies; but for this we may not blame the authorities, whose field of choice is somewhat restricted. It is fairly on the cards, however, that we shall have to note an improvement this time. With regard to the principal vocalists, the names of three sopranos — Madame Albani, Miss Liza Lehmann, and Miss Annie Marriott—command unhesitating acceptance. From the contraltos we again note the absence of Madame Patey, who seems, for some occult reason or other, to have dropped out of East Anglian memory. The leading contralto's place is filled by Miss Hilda Wilson—a very good substitute—who has Miss Lena Little for associate. In choosing as tenors Mr. Lloyd and Mr. McGuckin, with Mr. Charles Wade, the committee did the best possible, while Mr. Santley, Mr. Alec Marsh, Mr. Brockbank, and Mr. Barrington Foote answer for the baritones and basses.

The programme may be noticed in the order of performance. "Elijah" does not this time open the Festival, nor will Mendelssohn's oratorio be given at all. Consideration on the matter is entirely for those who know the feeling of the locality. "Elijah" has long held its place at the head of Festival schemes, not because of any prescriptive or traditional right, but because the people would have it so. Norwich may desire a change, in which case the fact is an ample justification of the present arrangement, and no more need be said. In place of "Elijah," the committee offer Mackenzie's Jubilee Ode, Saint-Saëns's Psalm xix, "The heavens declare the glory of God," and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise"—a varied selection which may, on account of its variety, run the drawing power of "Elijah" hard. On Wednesday morning will be presented "The Garden of Olivet," a devotional Oratorio, the text written and compiled from Holy Scripture by Joseph Bennett, the music composed by G. Bottesini. In this work the story of Gethsemane is told in narrative form, the governing idea being that a reader meditates upon the solemn episode in our Lord's life. Certain passages are dramatically treated, but mainly the work is constructed upon the lines just pointed out. The term "devotional" seems to be used not only as opposed to "dramatic," but also because justified by the character of the meditation, for which special verses, expressive of adoration and love, have been written. Regarding Mr. Bottesini's music, it will be more satisfactory to speak after hearing, but ever so slight a glance at the pianoforte score makes a favourable impression, because one cannot help seeing there a purely religious spirit expressed in beautiful melody and rich harmony. The new Oratorio will be followed by Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," but it is open to question whether two works of an intensely solemn nature should have place in the same programme. On the evening of Wednesday a miscellaneous selection of music will be performed; followed, on Thursday morning, by Mr. Mancinelli's new Oratorio "Isaiah"—a work founded, as to its subject, upon the siege of Jerusalem by Sennacherib, and the destruction of the Assyrian host in a single night. The incidents of the libretto are nearly all extra-Biblical, but very stirring and dramatic. An English text has been added to the original Latin by Joseph Bennett. Concerning the music there is real difficulty in speaking beforehand; seeing that much depends upon the scoring. But, indeed, the whole treatment of the subject is so new that to give a hasty opinion would be to run an unwarrantable risk. Cherubini's Fourth Mass follows Mancinelli's piece, and presents a most striking, possibly a most effective, contrast. On Thursday evening the chief features are Stanford's "Irish" Symphony, and Sullivan's "Golden Legend"; their respective composers conducting. On Friday morning the Festival ends with "The Messiah."

Reports from Norwich state that the demand for tickets is scarcely equal to that of 1884; on the other hand, almost all places are taken for the "Golden Legend," and it is hoped that the next few days will show a rapid improvement with regard to the other attractions.

MR. EBENEZER PROUT'S CANTATA "THE RED CROSS KNIGHT."

It was said of Schubert that had he lived long enough he would have set the whole of German poetry to music. Similarly, one might venture to predict that Mr. Prout, given time and the continued literary assistance of Mr. William Grist, will provide a musical illustration of every stirring epoch in the early history of England. To his vigorous and thoroughly national Cantatas "Hereward" and "Alfred" must now be added the present work, which has been composed expressly for the Huddersfield Choral Society, and will be performed at the Jubilee Concert of that Association on the 7th inst. We understand that several other performances in various parts of the kingdom have already been arranged, and some preliminary observations having reference to the outline and structure of the work cannot fail, therefore, to be acceptable. It must be distinctly understood that the following sketch is intended simply as descriptive; criticism must justly be reserved until the Cantata has been formally submitted to the verdict of musicians.

In his preface Mr. Grist states that his materials have been chiefly taken from a story called "The Knight of the Silver Shield," in a volume "The Romance of History," by H. Neele, though he is responsible for the dénouement and the introduction of Richard Cœur de Lion and Blondel the minstrel. We present the published "argument" in a condensed form. The castle and lands of Whittington, in Salop, and their heiress, Lady Edith, have been willed by the lady's father as the prize of a three days' tournament. The Lord Morice, a partisan of Prince John the Regent, has been victor over all comers on two successive days. On the third, Edith laments the long absence of her lover Roland at the Crusades, and her impending union with a hated kinsman. Roland suddenly arrives, and hurries to the tournament, to which also Richard, who has returned in disguise, and Blondel repair. After a desperate fight Roland overthrows Morice, and receives the victor's wreath, with which he starts to Whittington. But Morice, inflamed with rage, follows, and with his retainers attacks Roland, who succumbs to numbers, and is left for dead. Suspecting treachery, Richard and Blondel arrive, and the former's medical skill acquired in the East suffices to revive Roland. In the final scene, while Morice and his retinue are feasting at Whittington, and Edith sits apart bewailing her lover's fate and her own, Blondel is admitted, and in an allegorical song relates the story of the treachery and the approach of a rescuing force. Morice detects the allusion, but before his orders can be obeyed Richard and Roland, with their followers, appear, and Morice sues for mercy, which is granted, and the lovers are united.

A story of English chivalry and manhood such as this naturally suggests bold, vigorous, and straightforward musical treatment, and that being so, we could not name a composer more capable of rendering it justice than Mr. Prout. The librettist knew for whom he was writing, and the composer being thus well furnished, must have approached his task with zest. That he has succeeded as well, if not better than in his former semi-historical cantatas, may be said with little hesitation, and with this general statement we will pass to consider "The Red Cross Knight" in some detail. The prelude, maestoso, leading to Allegro marziale, is in condensed overture form. Three subjects are employed, all important enough to merit quotation. Here is the theme of the introduction :—

No. 1.

here the opening of the Allegro—

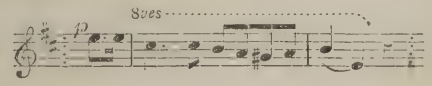
No. 2.

and here the well-contrasted flowing second subject of the same—

No. 3.



The first is identified throughout with the gallant Sir Roland, the second is met with in connection with King Richard, while the suave melody of the third suggests the Lady Edith.

Scene 1 is "The road to Shrewsbury. A crowd of people is moving along the road. Enter the attendants of the Lord Morice." The attendants open the chorus with their cry, "Way for the Lord Morice," which Mr. Prout has allotted to a dozen tenors and basses, while the orchestra reiterates this graphic figure—

No. 4. Allegro maestoso.

The alternative chorus of peasants, "Cursed be the Lord Morice," is in D minor, and offers an appropriate contrast. Without pause we are hurried into a scena for the haughty noble (baritone), which is one of the most important solos of the work. It is in several sections, of which the most effective is, perhaps, the concluding Allegro feroce in B flat minor. The chorus is then resumed with further developments after which "Morice and his attendants pass on," and the scene ends in D minor in a way peculiarly suggestive of coming trouble.

We are now transported to "Lady Edith's apartments at Whittington Castle." The heroine's attendants open the scene with a chorus for female voices offering an entire contrast to the preceding music. Here is its gentle winning theme—

No. 5. Allegretto.

The accompaniment is to a considerable extent independent of the voice parts and looks remarkably effective. Edith (soprano), however, refuses to be comforted, and prays for Divine assistance in a simple and devotional air "Lord of Heaven, to Thee appealing." Her prayer is at once answered, the motive of Roland (tenor) accompanying his welcome though unexpected appearance, Edith expressing her delight in a joyous Allegro molto "How shall I thank Thee, gracious Lord." It is now Roland's turn, and he relates to martial strains how, when a prisoner to Saladin, the news of his betrothed's impending fate reached him, and how the generous pagan allowed him to depart without ransom. The eagerness of the lover is well expressed by this metamorphosis of the Roland theme—

No. 6.

The air is brief, for a duet between the pair has yet to come. This commences with much energy, but the concluding section, Andantino, 6-8 time, "So fare thee well, sweet love," is extremely suave and tender, though we fancy the effect of the close is marred by two forte chords. Next comes a bright and bustling chorus of friends and neighbours, who rejoice at Roland's return. Here Mr. Prout has donned the mantle of Weber, and it suits him very well. The Coda, in which we are also reminded of Haydn, could not well be more spirited.

The third scene, "The Field of the Tournament," is the most important of the work. The first to enter are Richard (bass) and Blondel (contralto), and after some preliminary recitative, the former has an air in which he speaks of his motives in joining the Crusades, his treatment at the hands of the noble Saladin, and the lessons the journey has taught him. The music is well considered, and the martial element, though it could be wholly excluded, is wisely kept in the background as much as possible, considering what is to follow. First in the episode of the tourney comes a stirring chorus in 12-8 time, based on another modification of the Roland motive. This is a well-rounded number, and it is permitted to come to a full close. Then a trumpet call is heard, and the heralds (four basses in unison) call—"Knights, to achievement come forth." In response, a figure, generally associated with Morice, though it scarcely possesses the distinctiveness of a Leitmotif, is heard, and the chorus, with varying feelings, proclaim the advance of the two days' champion. Three times the trumpets sound the challenge, but no one else appears, and Edith's ladies, in agonising accents, call to heaven for aid. Their appeals are in most effective contrast to the pompous strains of the heralds. Here is one phrase, in which Mr. Prout indulges more freely in chromatic harmonies than is usual with him—

No. 7.

At length the Roland theme is heard, the music quickens, and the Knight enters and proclaims himself. The haughty Morice endeavours to dissuade him from risking his life, but Roland shouts defiance, and, after a spirited ensemble, the heralds call "'Laissez aller!' Heaven guard the right!" and the combat is supposed to commence. It is usual, both in opera and cantata, to illustrate a fight by instrumental music; but here the chorus is made to describe the fray, and the gain in effect is immense. Mr. Prout has been provided with an opportunity of putting forth his full streugth, and well has he risen to the occasion. The careering of the steeds, the shock of combat, and the growing excitement of the spectators are graphically portrayed in this splendid chorus, which we have little hesitation in predicting will be pronounced the composer's finest effort.

Structurally considered, it is simple enough, an Allegro in C major 4-4 time, changing to the tonic minor 12-8, the chorus having enough to do in the latter part to enunciate their words distinctly. The overthrow of Morice is illustrated by threatening and lugubrious music, and a brief peroration of a joyous nature brings the scene to a close.

After this breathless excitement some repose is needed, and happily it is provided. On his way to Whittington Roland muses on his adventures and their climax, his reflections taking the form of a recitative and a very melodious and expressive air in A flat, which, from the indications furnished, we should think is charmingly accompanied. The theme, which assumes some importance, begins as follows—

No. 8. Larghetto.

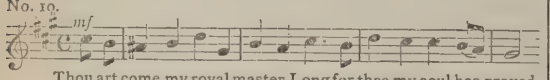
Morice and his retainers are not far behind, and their vengeful purpose is appropriately set forth by some highly dramatic phrases leading up to a strongly marked chorus in B minor, "Liege, thy mandate we obey." Richard and Blondel next appear, and in their brief duet prominence is given to the regal motive, No. 2, as Richard declares his intention of at once resuming the sovereignty. The scene then changes to another part of the road, and Roland enters, still with his love ditty on his lips, quickly to be interrupted by the entrance of Morice and his band, who attack and overthrow him. The Edith motive, No. 3, is heard as they start in all haste, bearing the trophy of victory, to Whittington. As Roland lies half-conscious the theme of his love-song, though somewhat saddened, still haunts him—

No. 9.

After Richard has revived him the scene closes with a melodious and Mozart-like terzetto, of which the first phrase will form a sufficient idea—

No. 10.



We now arrive at the sixth and final scene, which is described as "Interior of Whittington Castle; Morice is feasting with his retainers and friends; Edith sits apart in an alcove." The lady leads off in a scena, in which the representative of the part is certain to take delight. The opening symphony in F minor is sad but very pleasing, and so is the cavatina (not so called), of which an idea may be gained from the following quotation—

No. 11. Andante.

Blondel's harp without sounds the Roland motive, and, inspired by a sudden access of hope, Edith dashes into an Allegro con molto fuoco, which brings the piece to a most effective conclusion. The chorus of revellers, in A minor and major, "Quaff the mead from brimming measure," may be passed over without remark; but Blondel's allegorical song, mentioned above, at once arrests attention. Thus it opens—

No. 12. Andantino moderato.

But we should think that very little idea of the effect can be gained, even from the vocal score. Piccolo and harp predominate in the accompaniment, which evidently is highly picturesque. Twice Edith interrupts the song, and at last joins her voice with the singer as she recognises his meaning. The Finale consists of a series of short detached movements, and the composer has resisted the temptation either to write a fugal chorus or to work in his solo voices in an elaborately planned ensemble. Whether he has shown wisdom in this modesty and reticence is a matter on which judgment must be reserved. That "The Red Cross Knight," as a whole, will fully sustain and even enhance Mr. Prout's reputation there can be little doubt. Choralists will like it, for it gives them plenty of genial work; and soloists will like it, because the voice is always treated as a voice, and not as an orchestral instrument. The orchestration is certain to be masterly—the composer's name is a guarantee for that; and with so many points in its favour, it will be strange indeed if the work is not destined to enjoy the tide of success for a lengthy period.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS

By Joseph Bennett.

No. XXIII.—FÉLICIEN DAVID (continued from page 527).

David bore up well under the blow inflicted by his churlish uncle. For a little while he shared the small means of his brother Charles, who was himself struggling to live in Paris as a miniature portrait painter. But Félicien remained thus dependent only till he could obtain a few pupils to teach in the intervals of his own studies. These he eventually secured by holding out the bait of miserably low fees, and, no doubt, by submitting to humiliations of the worst kind. A starving man, however, cannot afford to be particular. David had to live somehow, and he bent his neck to the yoke of circumstances with all the grace he could command. Meanwhile, his work at the Conservatoire was assiduously carried on. David finished the harmony course in six months, studied counterpoint for a year under Fétis, and, later, became a pupil of Benoist for the organ and improvisation. He quitted the institution in 1831, having at no time received lessons in orchestration and higher composition. These things he had to master for himself in the school of experience, and in the face of many drawbacks. Soon after leaving the Conservatoire, David escaped the conscription and a soldier's life by drawing a lucky number, but fortune was not otherwise kind to the young man. He still toiled at ill-paid lessons, suffered many privations, and saw no way of escape from drudgery and want. A letter written by him at this time reveals almost a condition of heart-sickness:—

"As for money, since I must mention it, things go from bad to worse; it is always a descending road, and one thing is certain—I am very nearly at the bottom. I have been ill for three weeks with fever and general indisposition. The malady has been brought on by the trouble I have had, the bad food of Parisian restaurants, and the humidity that continually prevails here. Why am I not a little more rich? It seems to me that a living reasonable for an artist would do me much good. I do not speak of the body—a part of ourselves which, nevertheless, has some influence on the mind; but my imagination would benefit largely, for how can a head work freely when it is continually occupied with material wants? I declare that misery kills the imagination."

All the same, David called upon his imagination for strenuous efforts. Though wretched in mind and condition, he plied the pen with vigour; composing an "Ave Verum" and a "Lauda Sion" having a florid double counterpoint in accompaniment of the plain chant. To the same distressful period belong also a considerable part of an opera produced twenty years later—"La Perle de Brésil."

Young, ardent, and imaginative, having, almost of necessity, hard thoughts about a social organisation which, for him, meant semi-starvation, Félicien David was just the man to fall in with new schemes promising a better because more just distribution of the elements of content. Among his friends was a painter named Justus, a follower of Saint-Simon, and, like all the disciples of that remarkable man, ready to compass the world to make one proselyte. Justus soon converted David, who promptly joined the sect, and thus took a step which had an extraordinary influence upon his musical labours. The nature of that influence will appear by-and-by; for the present we have to do with our composer as a Saint-Simonian, and, in the first place, to show what a Saint-Simonian was.

Claude Henri, Comte de St. Simon, a member of one of the most illustrious French families, belonged to a group of men who, in the early years of the present century, were moved, not only to mourn over a social condition sustained by the grossest oppression and productive of untold misery, but also to devise that which they fondly hoped would commend itself as a better scheme. Fourier, Cabet, Leroux, our own Robert Owen, and many others, each worked in his own way and sphere for the accomplishment of a social revolution designed to make more equal the conditions of men and establish the reign of right upon the ruins of the government of might. In this great and good work—for great and good it was, however inadequate or mistaken the means employed—no one distinguished himself more by thoroughness and devotion than the Comte de St. Simon. After ten years' close study, to put himself abreast of the knowledge of the time, he determined to experience all that there was of pleasure and pain in human life. He practised all the vices and all the virtues in rotation; he courted contagious diseases and physical suffering, and very nearly killed himself in trying to make practical acquaintance with the feelings of a suicide. This probation over, he began to expound his regenerative scheme, founded upon the maxim "Love one another," and being, as he considered it, a sublimated form of Christianity—an advance upon Protestantism, as that was an advance upon the older creed. The system has been thus described: "His aim was the rapid amelioration, physical and moral, of the condition of the poor and most numerous class of society. To effect this, every one was to have a vocation according to his capacity, and every capacity a recompense according to its works. It was a religion in which all things were to be subservient to one supreme head—himself; and, after him, the ablest of his disciples. Property, and all other conflicting institutions, were to be abolished, and nothing was to interfere with the will of the father or supreme leader, whose authority was thus absolute. The abolition of competition, and the organisation of labour on such a more fitting and effective scale as the superior wisdom of the priesthood would naturally suggest, was a portion of the system. The transmission of property as well as of offices was to be abolished; industry was to be regulated in accordance with a self-constituted authority, and its advantages portioned out in the ratio of merit. The unholy bond of matrimony was to be abolished, and there was to be substituted for its restraints obedience to the sacred instincts of inclination as directed by the unerring wisdom of the Supreme Father. The empire of society was to be substituted for that of the family." On St. Simon's death, in 1825, he was succeeded by Bazard, whose supremacy over men like Auguste Comte and Augustin Thierry (also St. Simonians) must have had some occult justification, if any at all. After a while came the inevitable schism, and then the equally certain government prosecution, which broke up and dispersed what remained of the brotherhood at their house in the Rue Marsigny. On this another leader, Enfantin, with about forty comrades, retired to a country house near Paris, and set up a kind of monastery. In these later events Félicien David participated. He was a member of the brotherhood in the Rue Marsigny, and one of those who rallied round Enfantin at the "Abbey" of Ménilmontant. We are bound to assume that our composer entered thoroughly into the spirit of his new creed, but there can be no doubt that he found Saint-Simonianism a comfortable faith. It supplied his bodily wants, enabled him to associate with young and enthusiastic men, burning with zeal for every form of the higher life they sought to establish, and it afforded him abundant opportunity for the exercise of his art, and for obtaining the stimulus of public appreciation. This was particularly the case at Ménilmontant, which Enfantin carried on as a sort of missionary college. There liturgical music flourished, and it was the business of David to supply it, also to teach it to his brethren—a task he found less agreeable. Special occasions for musical display were plentiful, such as the ceremony of changing the domestics (the brethren did all their own household work, turn and turn about); and the ceremony of taking the habit, which included a flat cap, a blue tunic, a white breast-plate serving for waistcoat, and large trousers kept in place by a girdle distinctive of the travelling apostle. The breast-plate, it should be said, symbolised fraternity, because, as it buttoned behind, no brother could put it on without assistance. There was also the feast of the inauguration of the Temple—a large circus-like building erected by the fraternity themselves. The "Abbey" presently became famous for music, and its public services attracted an increasing crowd, much to the delight of David, who was ever seeking new occasions for the exercise of his art. He composed choruses to be sung between sections of the sermon, in imitation of Haydn's "Seven Last Words," and if the Supreme Father left the monastery for a few days, David was ready with a hymn of welcome on his return. His eagerness and ingenuity as composer in ordinary to the brethren are well shown by an anecdote wherein Lambert, afterwards Lambert Bey, founder of the Cairo Ecole Polytechnique, figures conspicuously. M. Azevedo may be allowed to tell it:—

"One evening the composer saw lights in the garden. He approached those who carried them; one, motionless, held a torch; the second moved in a great circle round the torch-bearer; a third, M. Duguet, the best waltzer of the community, turned rapidly round the second, carrying a lantern. What did this mean? Purely and simply an astrono mical demonstration made by M. Lambert to the members of his class. The motionless torch-bearer represented the sun; the circle-walker the earth, describing its revolution round the king of day, while the waltzer with his lantern was the moon moving round the earth. The professor, in brief terms, ordered the evolutions which showed the rising and setting of sun and moon, the seasons and eclipses. Félicien David looked on with all his eyes, and listened with all his ears, absorbed in profound contemplation. 'What do you think of my little astronomical ballet?' said Lambert, putting a hand upon his shoulder. 'Incomplete,' answered the composer, 'it wants music; but I will provide it.' He did so, and wrote a chorus for male voices with accompaniment, which finished with a vocalise, reserved by the author for his own performance. The chorus, naturally called the 'Dance of the Stars,' had as its words the explanations of the astronomical professor arranged in cadenced prose. Fifteen years later (Dec. 8, 1844) it took its place, as a 'Chant du Soir,' in the concert at which 'Le Désert' was heard for the first time."

The happy life at Ménilmontant did not last long. Alarmed at the continued propaganda of Saint-Simon's principles, the French government laid its hand upon the leaders, and broke up their communities. Under these circumstances, the brotherhood of Ménilmontant came to a resolution which, at least, showed their earnestness and enthusiasm. Since France would suffer them no longer, a number of the more ardent spirits determined to emigrate to Egypt, and revive the splendours of that ancient land, carrying there and disseminating the light of a practical civilisation. It was a grand and noble dream, worthy of the distinguished men into whose imagination it entered. Fascinated by its romance, Félicien David made up his mind to join the new apostolate, and, in due course, he, with the rest of the little band, started on their journey. "This," says a French writer, M. Sauvestre, "was a second Egyptian expedition. Through it France had the glory of giving, a second time in the same age, life to the old land of the Pharaohs. Egypt, under their hands, became transfigured. The Nile, embanked, found its master. Thereafter its fertile waters were judiciously distributed, and throughout the length of the immense valley a line of telegraphs made everywhere present the thought which directed, foresaw, repaired, and assured order and security. The Suez Canal, the idea of which revived at this period under the instigation of M. Enfantin, was only a part of an immense regenerative plan. Unhappily, it is difficult to establish anything where the Turk reigns. The embankment of the Nile is to-day but a splendid bridge in a desert place, the Polytechnic School, established by Lambert Bey, exists only in memory. The telegraphs are destroyed, the Cairo Observatory is abandoned, the School of Medicine closed; so with all the rest, save the Suez Canal, which M. de Lesseps has so vigorously taken up, and which, God be thanked, will be international property." All this was in the future when the Saint-Simonians, wearing the costume of their order, set out towards the sea, moving from town to town as best they could, and obtaining help on the road from sympathisers, or living upon the proceeds of concerts given by David, with the aid of a vocal quartet chosen from among the brethren. In many places the little band had a good reception, especially at Lyons, where a Saint-Simonian pianoforte maker presented David with an instrument specially constructed to endure the wear and tear of travel and the effects of a high temperature. This very acceptable gift accompanied our composer in all his wanderings, and was a source of profit no less than of pleasure. Avignon, superstitious and fanatical Avignon, awarded the pilgrims a very different greeting. The streets of the ancient town presented a curious spectacle on the day of their visit. Through them, with measured step and tranquil mien, passed the Saint-Simonians, while all around surged an angry mob, now throwing stones, now hurling imprecations at the devoted band, who might have been a group of early Christians on their way to the lions. Had David and his fellows quailed before the excited throng they would, in all probability, have been torn to pieces. But savage men, like savage beasts, are awed by a calm and fearless bearing; and so calm and so fearless were the pilgrims that soldiers, moved by instinctive respect for bravery, gave them the military salute. All the brethren escaped with their lives, but most of them bore away marks of the ordeal; David's share being a wounded finger. Marseilles made amends for the ferocity of Avignon. The citizens attended David's concert in crowds, gave a banquet to the entire party, and made their embarkation a kind of civic fête.

From Marseilles the brethren went to Constantinople, there settling down in a suburban mansion. Ill-fortune soon overtook them. They must needs see the sights of the Turkish capital, with, of course, the public procession of the Sultan to St. Sophia. His Majesty, in passing, noted the strange dress of the Saint-Simonians, and turning to his favourite, Achmet Pacha, demanded information regarding them. The ex-boatman, ignorant on most things, knew nothing about the visitors. "What, you dog," cried the Sultan, "there are strangers in my capital, and you know not what they are or why they have come!" Achmet could not punish his master for this public rebuke, but he naturally became enraged with the Saint-Simonians as the cause of it, and at once took measures to secure his revenge. He began by dissembling. One day the favourite presented himself at the modest home of the little band and made an exceedingly courteous speech. He had heard of their great learning and laudable purposes; he much desired to profit by their conversation and to entertain them in a manner becoming their distinction. Wherefore, he begged them to accept a guard of honour for that night, and, on the morrow, to take up their residence in his palace. So well did Achmet play the good fellow that the Saint-Simonians were perfectly charmed with him, and thought themselves very lucky indeed in having obtained so powerful a friend. The morrow brought a rude awakening. On being escorted to Achmet's palace by the guard, they were told to consider themselves prisoners. Of course energetic protests arose, much showing of passports, properly made out and signed, went on, and the assistance of the French consul was loudly invoked. Achmet soon saw that he had to deal, not with mere adventurers whom he could drown in the Bosphorous, but with the accredited subjects of a great and sensitive power. To kill them was impossible, but he was free to use indignity, and this he did by packing them off to Smyrna on board comfortless coasting boats, from one to another of which they were transferred as occasion demanded. The regeneration of the East began badly thus, nor did the prospect much brighten when, on arrival at Smyrna, the brethren were contemptuously told that all roads were open to them save in the direction of Constantinople. Under these circumstances, the party broke up. Some, like Félicien David, preferred to remain in Smyrna, while others went off in different directions.

The travelling pianoforte proved of great service to Félicien David in Smyrna. Accustomed as he was to improvise upon it, and with his voice, in the cool of the evening, when all the inhabitants were abroad, the instrument enabled its owner to advertise himself in the best manner possible. Our composer thus became quite a personage, and it is said that, sometimes, as he walked the streets, invisible hands—fair ones, doubtless—threw bouquets of flowers at his feet. He could not, however, live on bouquets. Pupils were even more welcome, and by their means David contrived to pass the months of May, June, and July, 1833, in something like comfort, making a common purse with a brother named Alick, whose talent as a sculptor was also turned to good account. David composed a few pieces during his residence at Smyrna, among them a set for the pianoforte, afterwards published as "Les Brises d'Orient."

From Smyrna, the French musician, accompanied by two brethren, Barrault and Granal, sailed for Jaffa in a ship chartered to convey some Christian pilgrims. On landing they accepted the hospitality of M. Damiani, consular agent of France—a well-known and singular personage, who affected a costume made up of fashions from many nations, and spoke a language compounded of various idioms. At the house of this gentleman, David performed what, in an earlier age, would have been deemed a miracle, entitling the worker to martyrdom. Seeing Damiani's son sick of intermittent fever and terribly weak and depressed, the musician offered the solace of his art, had his faithful companion, the pianoforte, taken to the young man's room, and began to play and sing. At once new life entered into the patient. He listened with growing interest and rapture, and, next day, rose from his bed free from the disease that had so long held him down.

On the way to Jerusalem our travellers halted at the Spanish monastery of Ramleh for the three days' hospitality usually extended by the monks to pilgrims bound for the sacred city. There an awkward contretemps nearly led to ignominious expulsion. On meeting a French soldier in the employ of the Egyptian viceroy, they were assailed with questions: "Who are you? Where are you going? Why this costume? Ah! you are Saint-Simonians; I have heard a good deal about the Saint-Simonians; I know you by reputation. You are very good fellows; you desire the happiness of the whole world; a most excellent sentiment. . . . I am glad to have met compatriots, and to have seen Saint-Simonians for once in my life." This was all very well; but the garrulous and warm-hearted son of Mars knew no better than to seek out the Superior and tell him what remarkable guests he was entertaining. A few minutes later, as David and his two friends were enjoying a meal, in rushed the Superior, followed by his cook, both fuming with rage. The reverend father was beside himself, and poured forth a torrent of abuse in Latin. His guests were apostles of Satan, missionaries of Beelzebub, preachers of hell. "Your lives are in my hand," he exclaimed; "but I am merciful, and will not take them. Leave the place this moment." When the Superior had talked himself out of breath, M. Barrault made reply, also in Latin, and so worked upon his host that permission to pass the night in the monastery was accorded, much to the disgust of the orthodox cook, who had throughout significantly handled a big knife. The fathers of the Latin convent at Jerusalem, on the other hand, made no difficulty about receiving the strange travellers, who lived with them while exploring the city and neighbourhood.

Returning to Jaffa, the three brethren took ship for Alexandria, where they met others of the Ménilmontant community, and set up once more a common home. Four months later, David moved on to Cairo, living there in the house of a compatriot, to whose children he gave lessons, by way of payment for board and lodging. Again his evening performances upon the pianoforte made him famous, but the instrument declined to endure the heat, and took a very emphatic way of expressing itself. One day it cracked so loudly that David felt sure a catastrophe had happened. But, on touching the keys, all seemed in good order till it was discovered that the pitch had dropped nearly a tone through the entire compass, without getting out of tune. David took the hint and escorted his piano back to more temperate Alexandria with all despatch. Again, however, he visited Cairo, moved to do so by a prospect of employment which led to one of the most humorous incidents in our composer's varied career. For the present we reserve the story.

"DON GIOVANNI."

Mozart, writing to his "dearest and best friend," Gottfried Jacquin, from Prague, on the 4th of November, 1787, says:—"My opera, 'Don Giovanni,' was given here on the 29th of October, with the most brilliant success." Before the event the composer was anxious; after the first rehearsal he asked the orchestral conductor, Kucharz, in confidence, what he thought of the opera. Even after the "brilliant success" of the first evening, he did not seem to expect that it would become world-famous. To the librettist, Da Ponte, he writes humbly, "Perhaps it will be performed in Vienna. I hope so." For the time Mozart was forgotten in Vienna. Martin's "Cosa Rara," Dittersdorf's "Doctor und Apotheker," and Salieri's "Axur" were attracting the attention of the court and of the public. Of the popularity of the first-named we get a glimpse in the supper-scene of "Don Giovanni" itself. The private musicians play favourite airs from the newest operas. As soon as they commence the last movement of the first Finale from the "Cosa Rara," Leporello exclaims "Bravi! 'Cosa Rara.'" But when at last "Don Giovanni" was performed in the Austrian capital it was a failure. So says Otto Jahn, the biographer of Mozart. It was certainly performed fifteen times in 1788, but after that it was not heard again until November 5, 1792, and in a "miserable German adaptation by Spiess."

"The opera is divine," said the Emperor Joseph to Mozart, "but it will try the teeth of my Viennese"; to which the latter promptly replied, "We will give them time to chew it." Well now, the whole world has had time to chew it, and has fitly endorsed the Emperor's opinion. The special performances to be given this month at home and in various parts of the Continent, to celebrate the centenary of the production of "Don Giovanni," show how wonderful a work it is. What opera by any other composer of the eighteenth century has maintained its popularity for a hundred years? What, indeed, has become of the afore-mentioned operas which, for a time, engrossed public attention, and caused people to turn deaf ears to the beauties of Mozart's music? "Don Giovanni" has certainly not had to wait a hundred years in order to become admired—even in Mozart's day there were others besides the Emperor who could appreciate its merits. But at this long lapse of time we can better judge of its greatness. We can see how it outlived all its contemporaries, and also how it bids fair, judging by its present popularity, to live on in undiminished glory. "Fidelio" and "Der Freischütz," to say nothing of more modern works, have done, and can do, it no harm.

The centenary of the production of Mozart's masterpiece suggests a few remarks about the work. During its long life it has met with many adventures. When the opera was produced at Vienna, three new pieces were introduced by Mozart. The soprano air "Mi tradi quell' alma ingrata" and the tenor air "Dalla sua pace" were added for the singers Mdlle. Cavalieri and Signor Francesco Morella. But a buffo duet for Zerlina and Leporello was written besides, and with this piece Mozart evidently wished to please the gods. Otto Jahn justly remarks that it is out of place in "Don Giovanni." But soon the opera met with bad treatment. A score, formerly in the private music collection of the King of Saxony, and supposed to have been written about the year 1790, gives us an early instance. The text is completely changed, the order of the music altered, and pieces introduced from the operas "Figaro" and "Titus." For example, Zerlina and Leporello appear immediately after the overture; they are betrothed, and while the former is trying on a bonnet, the latter sings "Cinque, dieci" from "Figaro." Later, on presenting to her a ring, she sings "Vedrai carino." It would serve no useful purpose to give the new plot in detail. The piece concludes with the supper scene, but as no Commendatore has been killed, the reader must not expect his ghost to interrupt the festive scene. A knock is heard: Don Giovanni goes to the door, and comes back followed by the Ministro della giustizia. The latter sings the music assigned to the Commendatore, but his first words are "Signor conte, ah mi perdoni, senza invita io son venuto." Let us leave this caricature of the opera, and turn to another and, in some respects, a worse one. The "Marriage of Figaro" had been given in Paris, in distorted form, in 1793, and had met with no success. The turn of the "Magic Flute" came in 1801, and the performance has been described as a "pastiche ridicule"; it was entitled "Les Mystères d'Isis," and was nicknamed by the musicians of the orchestra "Les Misères d'Isis." In 1805 it came to the turn of "Don Giovanni" to be represented in a fashion equaliy ridiculous and reprehensible. Libretto and score were "turned upside down," says a French historian; the only piece left untouched was the overture. Music by other composers was freely introduced. The entry of the Commendatore, the duel, and the fine trio for the three basses were all cut out; so also was the solo for Donna Anna, "Or sai chi l'onore," when she recognises the assassin of her father. Anna, Elvira, Ottavio did not appear in the Finale of the first act. The reader, from this, may imagine that the Trio of Masks had to be sacrificed. Not so; it was sung by three gendarmes. The two soprano parts rendered by men's voices an octave lower must have produced a comical effect.

The scene was at Naples; an eruption of Vesuvius destroyed Don Juan's palace. Close by the ruins was seen the statue of the Commendatore, which Leporello, in a few phrases of recitative composed by Kalkbrenner, invited to supper. So ended the first act. The "O statua gentilissima" was given later on in a "salon d'auberge." But in spite of all this cutting, adding, changing, in spite of the ridiculous words, the opera was successful. In 1834 Castil-Blaze gave a new version of "Don Juan," "more true to the original," says Otto Jahn. It is perhaps as well not to enquire too deeply into this version, for from all we know of him Castil-Blaze cannot have been very much better than the arrangers of the earlier version, whom he calls "bunglers" (tripoteurs); "disarrangers" (dérangeurs); he was indeed scarcely the man to cast stones at other people. Under such disadvantageous circumstances did "Don Juan" make its first appearance on the French boards.

As in Paris, so in London, "Figaro" was first given. In Paris, as we have seen, that opera was not successful. In London it was quite different, and the favour which "Figaro" met with probably led to the production of "Don Juan." It should be noticed, however, that the two operas were known, in some form or other, much earlier in Paris.

"Don Giovanni" was played for the first time in London at the King's Theatre on April 12, 1817. "The very announcement of this opera," says the writer of the notice which appeared two days later in the Morning Herald, "was sufficient to kindle a hope of pleasure which soon became almost enthusiasm." The Morning Chronicle spoke of the opera as "the greatest work of Mozart's, and the finest specimen that exists of dramatic music." But how was the music given? Sir Henry Rowley Bishop commenced "adapting" foreign operas to the English stage. The writer of the article on Bishop in The Musical Times for December, 1886, speaks of "Don Giovanni," "Figaro," "Il Barbiere," and "Guillaume Tell" as "having passed into the Moloch of adaptation, coming out scathed, distorted, and hardly recognisable." It is quite possible, as the writer suggests, that Bishop did these things "against his own inclination"; but, at the present moment, the history of Mozart's opera alone concerns us. No doubt the habits of the time and the state of public taste and opinion may be urged in palliation of his crimes. It is difficult to state exactly the extent to which "Don Giovanni" was mutilated, from the published piano arrangements of the overture and some of the songs. They are full of small changes—principally cuts. In almost every page proof is given that the adaptor did whatever pleased him, and was guided by what he thought the public would like and applaud.

Times have changed: such concoctions as those of Kalkbrenner or Bishop would now be hooted off the stage. But the mania for strengthening the instrumentation in various places by the addition of trombone parts is not yet quite extinct, although by this means one of the finest of Mozart's orchestral effects —viz., the introduction of trombones for the first time at the entry of the Commendatore in the supper scene—is entirely lost; and singers do not hesitate to make alterations of notes, which, however trivial, show a want of proper respect towards the composer.

But there are other kinds of adaptations about which we would fain say a word or two. The airs of "Don Giovanni" have been arranged for flute, for guitar; they have found their way into children's instruction books; they are vulgarised in countless drawing-room fantasias; they form the material out of which the virtuoso constructs pieces whose difficulty forms in most cases their chief charm; they have been arranged for the concertina and the harmonium. Dance music of all kinds has been made of the "Don Giovanni" opera; "Batti, batti," has been turned into a hymn-tune; "Notte e giorno faticar" and "Fin ch'an dal vino" have been travestied as a "Docti sacris" and a "Lauda Sion"; and one Mass is known as a "Missa di Figaro Don Giovanni." Such is the fate of great works: they are turned and twisted into shapes innumerable. Some of these adaptations are harmless, some ridiculous, some irreverent, but all more or less inartistic.

The opera of "Don Giovanni" carries us back to a period when the harpsichord still formed part of the orchestra. The Recitativo secco of "Don Giovanni" was, in Mozart's time, accompanied by cembalo, a violoncello, and a double-bass. This combination cannot be restored, and in listening to the very "secco" effect of these recitatives as rendered now at the opera-house, it should not be forgotten that Mozart's intentions are not fully realised. Another point in the score is also worthy of mention. With the exception of the short Coro di servi for tenors and basses, just before the entry of the Masks in the Finale of the first act, there is no indication whatever in Mozart's autograph score of any other passage in this Finale being strengthened by chorus. Yet in performance now-a-days there are many passages in which the chorus takes part. When Zerlina cries out "Gente, ajuto, ajuto, gente," the librettist has indicated that the musicians and the others should go off in confusion (I suonatori e gli altri partono confusi). It has been argued that this stage-direction is somewhat strange, for at the cry for help it would seem natural that the peasant men should run to the assistance of Zerlina, while mere curiosity would keep the peasant women on the spot. The musical argument in favour of the disappearance is, however, very strong. Had Mozart intended the chorus to remain on the stage he would have written special parts for them, and not merely given them the solo parts to double. So says Julius Rietz, in the preface to the edition of Mozart's operas published by Breitkopf und Härtel. The four Finales in "Figaro" and "Cosi fan tutte" show that the composer did not always employ the chorus in such places.

Another point of interest which has been hotly discussed is the ball-room scene in the first act. To arrange the stage so that the minuetto, the follia, and the alemana may be distinct to eye and ear is not easy. The clever proposal of A. von Wolzogen, in his pamphlet "Don Juan. Auf Grundlage der neuen Textübersetzung von B. v. Gugler neu scenirt und mit Erläuterungen versehen," published by Leuchart at Breslau, in reference to this matter, may perhaps interest the reader. He says:—

"The ball-scene can only be played in one room, large and deep (this is in answer to a proposal to divide the stage into three rooms), in which is placed only one orchestra, the one belonging to the palace, playing the Minuet. As soon as the music has commenced, Don Juan opens a side door letting in a troop of ordinary musicians who tune up for the Contretanz, and afterwards another door letting in a second troop who strike up with the Waltz. All this takes place in one room, but in different corners, as Don Juan had clearly ordered in the so-called Champagne song (senza alcun ordine la danza sia). Don Juan has his plot with Zerlina, and plans everything to bewilder his guests. The giddy maze of the three dances is of service for this. Besides, we so imagine the scene that the dancers of the two ambulant bands do not come in with the players, for that would cause too much stage confusion; the former are in the room looking at the Minuet dancers, and, as soon as they hear the new orchestra tuning, go up to it in order to commence their favourite dance."

Many other interesting stories might be told about the opera, many other profitable remarks made about the score; but to give more would extend this article to undue length, and the reader might weary of it, or pass it by altogether.

A few words in conclusion about Da Ponte, who wrote the libretto for Mozart. The names of two operas have been given which threw for the time "Don Giovanni" into the shade at Vienna. Da Ponte wrote the libretti of all three operas at one and the same time, and in his autobiography he relates how he told the Emperor Joseph II. that "he could write for Mozart at night and imagine himself reading Dante's 'Inferno'; for Martini in the morning and be reminded of Petrarch; and in the evening for Salieri who should be his Tasso." He went to America in 1805, where, after a chequered career, he died of old age on August 17, 1838. The actual place of his burial, like that of Mozart, is unknown. Da Ponte was present at the first performance of "Don Giovanni" in America, given by the Garcia troupe in 1825. Da Ponte's libretto may not be all that could be desired, but it enabled Mozart to produce a masterpiece. The author was fully conscious of the share of praise due to him. In a letter written three years before his death he speaks of himself as "the inspiration of Salieri, of Weigl, of Martini, of Winter, and of Mozart."

WAGNER'S FIRST MEETING WITH LISZT.

A curious instance—but perhaps a not unprecedented one—of the manner in which letters from eminent persons are apparently sometimes fabricated has recently been brought to light. Some two months ago a French paper, Le Courrier de l'Art, published an ostensibly original letter of Wagner's, containing an account of his first meeting with Liszt, the substance of which is almost identical with a passage contained in Wagner's already and long-ago published pamphlet, entitled Eine Mettheilung an meine Freunde (A Communication to my Friends). It is, of course, within the bounds of possibility that Wagner may have written a private letter on this subject, and subsequently have incorporated it in his pamphlet; but that he did so has by no means been established. Far more likely is it that the editor of the French paper was hoaxed into publishing a spurious letter of Wagner's in the belief that it was an authentic one. The amusing result of the transaction consists in the fact that at least half-a-dozen of the leading Wagnerite organs in Germany (which we forbear to specify) at first regarded the letter as bonâ fide, and with alacrity set to work to translate it into their vernacular; but on subsequently discovering its origin have been bewailing the fact (which some have put down to the "dog-days and the long-continued heat") that their memory and familiarity with Wagner's pamphlet did not serve them to make the discovery sooner. In whatever way the publication of this said letter was brought about, we cannot but be thankful to the French editor for giving a wider currency to a passage from Wagner's pamphlet than apparently it would otherwise have obtained. The passage is a very interesting one, and well bears reproduction. Premising that we translate, not from the garbled French version, nor from the re-translation of the German papers, but from Wagner's original, to be found in Vol. 4 of his Collected Writings, here it is. Wagner writes (in 1851):—

"I met with Liszt for the first time in my life during my earliest sojourn in Paris (1839), and moreover during the latter part of that sojourn when, humiliated and disgusted, I had renounced all hope of, and even the wish for, a Parisian success, and was in that state of revolt against the artistic world there which I have already described. At this meeting Liszt struck me as the most complete contrast to my own nature and position. It was in this world, in which I had hoped to gain a footing and to shine, on emerging from obscurity into greatness, that Liszt had from his earliest youth grown up unconsciously and become its wonder and delight, at a time when I was so thrust aside by the coldness and want of kindness it had shown me, that I could not but regard its hollowness and emptiness with all the bitterness of feeling that disappointment engenders. Thus Liszt appeared to me as an individual to be regarded with something more than suspicion. I had no opportunity of making myself known to him in my true nature or by my works; his knowledge of me at this time must have been as superficial as the manner of his reception of me, which was easy to account for in the case of a man who was daily pestered by visits from all sorts of people, while I, on my part, was just then by no means in the humour to inquire with calmness and justice into the reasons of a course of conduct which, though kind and polite, was only calculated to wound me. After this first occasion I did not call on Liszt again, and—certainly without my knowing him, and with no desire to make his further acquaintance—he remained, as far as I was concerned, just one of those persons whom we, as it were, naturally regard as strange and repellent. What I repeatedly expressed to others, while under this conviction, came at last to Liszt's ears, and just at that time when I had so suddenly excited attention by the performance of my 'Rienzi' at Dresden. He was surprised to have been so thoroughly misunderstood by a man of whom he knew next to nothing, and whose acquaintance it now dawned upon him from the above circumstances was, perhaps, worth making. At present, on looking back, I find something inexpressibly touching in the earnest and repeated advances which Liszt now made in hope of changing my feeling towards him. As he still knew nothing of my works, it certainly was not his artistic sympathy which prompted him to become better acquainted with me; but solely the purely human wish to prevent a continuance of that feeling of discord which had arisen accidentally in his contact with another; and this, perhaps, was associated with the slightest possible doubt as to whether he had not really injured me. Everyone who is familiar with the boundless selfishness and unfeeling disregard which, when we come into contact with one another, pervade all our social relationships, especially those of the modern artist, will be more than astonished, nay, will be thoroughly entranced, when he has experienced such proofs of the regard of an individual as were bestowed upon me by this extraordinary man.

"But at that time I was not yet in a position to be affected by the unusual charm and attractiveness of this manifestation of Liszt's disposition, which is, above all things, lovable and loving. It was with feelings of astonishment that at first I still regarded his approaches to me, but which, sceptical as I was, I was often inclined slightly to encourage. Liszt had now been present at a performance of 'Rienzi' in Dresden, which he was almost obliged to bring about by force; and from all quarters which he visited in his virtuoso-career, I received, sometimes through one person and sometimes through another, proofs of his restless eagerness to impart to others the pleasure which he had received from my music, and thus—as I should almost prefer to believe—quite unintentionally to act as a propagandist for me. This happened at a time when it was constantly becoming more evident to me that I could not look for any outward result from my dramatic labours. As ever more clearly and at last decisively this entire absence of result was manifested to me, Liszt was succeeding by his own individual efforts in establishing a place of refuge for my art. He gave up his wandering life, and—though at home amid the splendours of the most glittering cities of Europe—set himself down in modest little Weimar, where he took up the bâton as conductor. It was there I last met him, when—still uncertain as to the real character of the persecution which threatened me—I was staying for a few days on Thuringian soil previous to my flight from Germany, which had now become necessary.* On the same day that it had become certain that I was in a most hazardous position, I saw Liszt conduct a rehearsal of my 'Tannhäuser,' and from the way he did it was astonished to recognise in him my second self; what I felt as I conceived this music, he felt as he performed it; what I wanted to say, as I wrote it down, he said as he made it sound. Wonderful! Through the love of this rarest of friends I found at the very moment when I myself was homeless that real and long-desired home for my art which I had sought for everywhere but in the right place, and never found. Whilst I was banished to wander in foreign lands, he, who had wandered all the world over, retired to this little place in order to make a home for me there. In all things and always having a care for me, ever ready to help when help was needed, with his heart wide open to all my wishes, and with the most devoted love for my whole being, Liszt became for me something that I had never found before, and this to an extent which can only be thoroughly comprehended by him who has experienced it to the full.

"Towards the close of my last sojourn in Paris, when ill, miserable, and despairing, I was brooding over my fate, I chanced to look at the score of my 'Lohengrin,' which I had almost entirely forgotten. Suddenly I felt a pang at the idea that the notes, which lay buried on the death-pale paper, should never be made to sound. In reply to a few words I wrote to Liszt, I learnt that the most complete preparations, which the limited resources of Weimar would allow, were being made for the production of 'Lohengrin.' Whatever men and circumstances could accomplish was done to make the work understood there. In consequence of the present unavoidable incompleteness of our theatrical performances, the sharp-witted imagination of the public, which alone could bring about the necessary comprehension of the work, could not immediately assert its determining power; under the prevailing influence of the day, error and misconception prevented its being an undisputed success. What was to be done to remedy the deficiency, and in every way to assist the understanding, and at the same time the result? Liszt at once saw what was needed, and did it; he laid before the public his views and impressions of the work in a manner which, for its convincing eloquence and overwhelming effect, has never been equalled.* He was rewarded by the result, and with this result he came before me and exclaimed: 'Look, so far we have advanced matters; now create us a new work that we may advance still further.'"

* In consequence of the part which Wagner had taken in the revolution at Dresden.

* In allusion to Liszt's masterly critique of "Lohengrin," published, soon after its first performance, by F. A. Brockhaus, of Leipzig.

PROSPECTS OF THE SEASON.

The principal Concert-giving agencies of the metropolis have now issued their prospectuses, and amateurs, by perusing them, may know what they are entitled to expect during the coming winter. Generally speaking, we may say that the outlook is good. There will be performances enough in all conscience, and plenty of novelty, together with works not new but of particular interest, figures in the programmes.

Seniores priores. The Sacred Harmonic Society puts forth a scheme of more than usual attraction, and marked by indication of an important change in policy. Of the seven works announced to be given at six Concerts, four are comparatively new. No doubt the Society does well thus to fall in with the spirit of the times. Our public are waxing curious about musical productions, and Concert-givers who would draw them must take note of and act upon the fact. The season opens on November 17, with Cusins's "Jubilee Ode" (first time of performance in public) and Bottesini's Norwich Oratorio "The Garden of Olivet" (first time in London). Sullivan's "Golden Legend"—a partially "sacred" work, at any rate—is down for the second Concert and "The Messiah" for the third. The business of the new year begins (January 19) with Rossini's "Moses," after which come "Elijah" and Cowen's "Ruth." On May 3 a Conversazione at Prince's Hall ends the season. Eminent artists have been engaged, and the performances will take place under the direction of Mr. W. H. Cummings. We are glad to find that the directors, breaking with an obsolete state of things, announce that the Concerts will begin at eight o'clock instead of 7.30, and that restrictions to evening dress are removed, save in the case of sofa stalls.

The thirty-second series of Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace is fixed to commence on the 8th inst. There will be twenty-one performances, eleven before and ten after Christmas, while regarding all these it may be said, on the strength of the prospectus, that no effort has been spared to make them unusually interesting. The list of artists engaged is a long one, comprising many names illustrious in art. The orchestra is maintained at its full strength, and the number of specially attractive works promised should have a material influence upon the attendances throughout the season. We can only mention a few of these by way of sample. At the first Concert will be given a new Concert Overture by the rising young English composer, George John Bennett. The second programme contains a new Suite of Ballet Airs from the graceful pen of Mr. Goring Thomas, and the fifth promises a Concert Overture by a musician bearing the Celtic name, Hamish MacCunn. At the seventh Concert, an Overture in E minor, by Schubert, and a Concertstück by F. Néruda, are to be heard for the first time, while later in the season amateurs are invited to hear a String Concerto in B flat by Handel, a Symphonic Fantasia by Rubinstein, a Clarinet Concerto by Reitz, a Concert-piece for violin and orchestra by Saint-Saëns, a new Cantata, "The Day Dream," by Charlton Speer, a new Symphony by Dvorák, and a Ballad for chorus and orchestra by MacCunn. In addition to these novelties and a host of standard works, performances will be given of the "Golden Legend," "Don Giovanni" (celebrating the centenary of its first representation), Berlioz's "Lelio," and Cowen's "Ruth." Evidently the new Crystal Palace season is to be a busy and interesting one. There remains to hope that Mr. Manns will have abundant reason to be satisfied with the response of the public to its activity.

Novello's Oratorio Concerts are announced to begin on November 10 and end on March 28, upon and between which dates six performances will be given. The public look to these Concerts for the enterprise that brings in novelty, and, doing so now, they have no reason to feel disappointed. Granted that the novelty is not absolute, but in no case has the freshness of the chosen works so far disappeared that interest from that source cannot be felt. At the opening Concert we are promised Mackenzie's "Jubilee Ode"—not yet heard in London proper, and Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride," a Cantata that has by no means taken the place in public esteem which it is destined to hold when more familiar. Mr. Cowen's "Ruth" fills up the second programme, and will be heard on December 1, for the first time in London, the composer conducting. The importance of this event is sure to meet with appreciation at the hands of metropolitan amateurs, a large and representative gathering of whom may be expected. Mr. J. F. Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," which has somehow dropped out of sight lately, figures in the scheme of December 15, and will be conducted by the composer. After it (February 22) comes the inevitable "Golden Legend," to be given under Sir Arthur Sullivan's direction, if he be in England at the time. Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon" follows (March 13), the series ending (March 28) with Gounod's "Redemption." For the due execution of the foregoing important works distinguished artists are engaged, including Madame Albani, who will appear at several of the Concerts. Dr. Mackenzie will conduct the later performances, his place being filled on earlier occasions by Mr. Randegger, Mr. Cowen, Mr. Barnett, and, probably, Sir Arthur Sullivan. It is necessary to add only that the orchestra and chorus will be no less numerous and efficient than heretofore.

The London Symphony Concerts enter upon their second season on November 15, under the direction of their founder, Mr. George Henschel. Sixteen performances will be given between the date just mentioned and March 6, half of them taking place in the evening, the remainder in the afternoon. In addition to the excellent orchestra, engagements have been made with Mr. Joachim, Mr. Stavenhagen, Mr. Saint-Saëns, Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Santley, and others. With regard to the programme full particulars have not yet appeared, but the enterprise and judgment of Mr. Henschel may be depended on for a large amount of interest and plenty of the attraction belonging to new and unfamiliar works. A prominent place will, no doubt, be given to Wagner's Symphony in C, the right of performing which, in Great Britain, belongs to Mr. Henschel. It is a very interesting work of full symphonic proportions and having a remarkable slow movement. But perhaps the most striking feature is its perfect observance of orthodox form and rule. Wagner amongst the regular prophets is indeed a novel spectacle.

The Popular Concerts issue no prospectus properly so called, but will resume in their usual quiet way during the last week of the present month, when young Josef Hofmann will appear. With regard to the Albert Hall Choral Society, we understand that performances of the "Golden Legend" and Verdi's "Requiem" are contemplated, but nothing more novel will be produced during the season.

All our readers will join us in felicitating Mr. F. H. Cowen upon his recovery from the attack of a menacing disease. The composer of "Ruth" sickened, as everybody knows, on the very morning which saw that work produced, and only by a strenuous fight against advancing weakness was he able to conduct the oratorio and, later, the Scandinavian Symphony. Next day scarlatina declared itself, happily in a form so mild that, by the time these lines appear, Mr. Cowen will, it is hoped, have passed through the convalescent stage. The circumstances might easily have been much worse. Fate, however, was not in the mood of savage irony which sometimes prompts it to lift a man high that he may fall with the greater crash. All the same, Mr. Cowen has reason to bear the production of "Ruth" in mind, quite apart from the success achieved and the encouragement afforded. It is a curious circumstance that his librettist was disabled by sharp indisposition on the same day. Lovers of "judgments" probably saw one here, and came to the conclusion that both author and composer had done something wrong in "Ruth." The dances! who can say that the visitation was not on their account?

Joy for the would-be musical. The following advertisement, from an American source will be read with delight by those "whose musical education has been neglected." If they have failed to acquire "the art of playing the piano in three months," or have not succeeded in making home happy by the addition of musical accomplishments which may be attained "for an expenditure of fifteen postage stamps," they can now take heart of grace and fall back upon the "Kazoo." It is recommended as a novelty for minstrel and special artists, but it is also intended for popular use. Aspiring amateurs may bless the inventor who has provided a means for new delight. He does not, it is true, give an elaborate description of the instrument, but its complicated machinery may be studied by those who are inclined to invest two dollars for a dozen. Its wonderful musical and other powers may be gathered by the purchaser, who is advised to "Read and follow these directions carefully, and if you fail to get your money's worth of fun and amusement out of the Kazoo the first day, return it at once and your money will be refunded. It will take at least ten minutes to show all the Kazoo will do, so don't ask it. Always play with the holes up. Do not blow into the Kazoo, but sing, speak, or make some imitation. You will soon find that it can be played upon with ease, is capable under expert manipulation of producing most fascinating music, and is a never ending source of amusement. It will play any tune, imitate any bird or animal, bagpipes or Punch and Judy. To get a rich, full, tone, hold the hand tightly over the end of the Kazoo. If the Kazoo does not work properly, place the lips over the tin and draw the breath quickly in and out. Quartets or choruses using the Kazoo invariably receive repeated encores; buy four Kazoos and try it. For a burlesque quartet, use the Kazoo as mouth-piece on tin, horn, tea-kettle, coffee-pot, tin sprinkler, &c. It furnishes good dancing music for excursions, pic-nics, &c. Campaign and other clubs find the Kazoo vastly superior to anything else in street parades, mass meetings, political or social gatherings. Whittled down and used as a mouth-piece on brass or tin horns, a good band can be organised with little practice as the keys require no fingering. Orchestras find the Kazoo an important addition. Play a lively tune on a Kazoo or any other instrument, and drone with a Kazoo and you have a good bag-pipe. To imitate Punch and Judy, speak in a shrill voice in the three side holes. To imitate a pig, frog, or rooster, use the small end. To imitate a calf or sheep, use the three side holes. To imitate a horse or dog, use three holes in the tin, leaving the fourth uncovered. In stores, streets and news stands, fairs, races, pleasure resorts, &c., the sales are the largest on record." After this the music of the spheres will probably be spoken of as only second in degree to the music of the Cylinders. The happy possessor of the Kazoo, a title whose derivation may occupy the best thoughts of the philologists, can boast with the immortal Mr. Jenkins, the owner of the tuneful snuff-box, that if he is not musical himself, "that he has got a Kazoo what is."

We are rather fond of priding ourselves on the spread of musical knowledge, and the great improvement which has taken place of late years in the manner in which the art is handled by the scribes who contribute to the various public prints. It is unquestionably true that competent critics are far more numerous than they were a generation ago, and the curiosities of musical criticism which we cull from time to time are generally taken from remote publications, and are calculated to amuse rather than surprise. During the silly season from which we are just emerging, however, some amazing matter has found its way into journals where one expects accuracy at any rate. In a review noted for the pungency of its articles on political and social subjects appeared a notice of the Worcester Festival, in which the writer managed to crowd in misstatements with an ingenuity worthy of a better cause. It is probable that the poor man wrote "from information received" and not from personal observation, and his errors are susceptible of some excuse on that ground. But then he should not have ventured into the domain of criticism. It was of course permissible of him to say of Mr. Cowen's "Ruth" if he pleased that, "The work falls off a little towards the end, and it is perhaps a trifle long." But what are we to understand by this? "Nor, as it seems to us, is the conclusion quite appropriate, and this concerns Mr. Joseph Bennett, the librettist, quite as much as Mr. Cowen, the composer." Now the oratorio, like the original story, ends with the marriage of Boaz and Ruth, so that any inappropriateness concerns the Biblical author quite as much as Mr. Bennett or Mr. Cowen. Our critic should have explained himself. However, though he cannot be very well proud of his festival notice, his offence is venial compared with that perpetrated, or, at least, permitted, recently in a paper wholly devoted to the interests of music. In an article, with quotations, on a work which need not be named, it is said of Haydn and his first visit to this country, in 1791, that "His twelve grand symphonies were composed expressly for this series of Concerts," and "His grand oratorio 'The Creation' was also written while he was in this country." Here is news indeed. All Haydn's biographers agree that he came twice to London, and that he composed six of the Salomon Symphonies on his second visit. Also that he took home the libretto of "The Creation" and had it translated and altered by Van Swieten before he set to work upon it. It is well, however, that the truth should be known, though so late in the day.

A new and interesting work, entitled "The Annals of the Edinburgh Stage, with an Account of the Rise and Progress of Dramatic Writing in Scotland," has been written, and will shortly be published by James C. Dibdin. The subject, although engrossingly interesting to the student of British Dramatic History and the general reader alike, has hitherto been neglected—perhaps because it is one which can only be dealt with after much time spent in the collection of material, most of it extremely difficult to obtain. The few meagre attempts that have hitherto passed current as Histories of the Edinburgh Stage, it will readily be admitted, are no standard by which to judge the merits of the subject. The connection with the history of the London Stage is most intimate. Many of our best actors received their theatrical education, or part of it, in Edinburgh, and the subject, though nominally local, is by no means deficient in general aim and purpose. The record will also include a number of interesting references to music and musicians in connection with the stage.

The Liszt Scholarship Fund has recently been enriched by a handsome donation of £50 from Signor Buonamici, the proceeds of a Recital which—assisted by Mr. Walter Bache and Mr. Fritz Hartvigson—he gave at the Prince's Hall in July last.

Whoever read the statistics of the Worcester Festival, as published by the Committee, must have been struck by a feature no less satisfactory than, to most people, unexpected. We refer to the large attendance on the occasion when "Ruth" was performed. This was so much out of the common course that it may fairly be taken as a phenomenon. It is true that, of late, we have been accustomed at the Three Choir Festivals to see new works rival in attractive power those of a standard character. But "The Redemption," "Mors et Vita," "The Golden Legend," &c., went down to the western shires already stamped with the hall mark of public approval, verified as excellent, and presenting claims upon attention not to be overlooked. The case of "Ruth" was altogether different. Nothing was known about it, the work sprang from a source whence oratorio had never before proceeded, and its only prima facie recommendations were the popularity of the story and the good repute of the composer in other branches of his art. A few years ago these advantages would have signified nothing; perhaps they were worth no great deal in the present case, yet the public flocked to hear "Ruth" with singular unanimity and manifest interest. From this fact we can draw only one inference—namely, that a wholesome state of feeling with regard to music is rapidly springing up amongst us. The attitude of a public towards new works supplies the best possible test of such a change, for the musical health of any people is always in exact proportion to the liveliness of their interest in current events connected with the art. The interest shown at Worcester, be it remarked, was spontaneous, and not called forth by knowledge of a similar feeling elsewhere, as in the case of other works already named. Here lies much reason for congratulation regarding the present and hope for the future.

An advertisement in the public journals has recently offered for sale the library of music belonging to Mr. Henry Leslie's choir. This, of course, means that the work of the choir is finished and its disbandment accomplished. We unfeignedly regret an event which deprives the metropolis of a body of singers once unrivalled for the rendering of unaccompanied vocal music, and, at the same time, leaves nothing behind likely to fill the vacated place. It would seem that we have definitely abandoned a form of art wherein it is so easy for English amateurs to excel. The glee went long ago, and now the part-song and madrigal have followed it (we are referring to London only), leaving the cantata, oratorio, and other works for voices and orchestra combined, in full possession of the field. It is, perhaps, vain to wail over the issue, though we are bound to regard it as disastrous, but there may be some use in pointing the moral of the Leslie choir for the benefit of surviving bodies. For some years past the choir has followed a shilly-shally policy, to all appearance not knowing its own mind long together. First Mr. Leslie retires, and his followers determine to perform the "happy despatch" over his empty seat. This was at all events heroic. Then the choir wants to come to life again, and does so under the guidance of Mr. Randegger. Next, Mr. Randegger and the choir part company, Mr. Leslie coming up once more, like a "Jack-in-the-box," and taking his old place. By this time the once unmatched singers have so far fallen off that they meet with severe criticism in place of praise, and the choir, seeing nothing left to live for, resolves to die again. We regret its fate, and, still more, the ignominious, but easily avoidable, circumstances which have made that fate a warning.

The good work of enlisting music more and more completely on the side of religious and moral influences goes bravely on. A daily contemporary has drawn attention, within the last few days, to remarkable developments of the policy adopted, in a manner so conspicuous, by the late Dean of Gloucester, and imitated elsewhere. First, we have the noteworthy Sunday afternoon services at the Church of St. Nicholas', Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street. These, it should be pointed out, are now in their third winter season, and, therefore, take precedence of enterprises which have attracted wider notice, despite their more recent origin. But, apart from any such consideration, the Rector of the little city parish deserves hearty congratulation upon the stedfast manner in which, braving the criticism of the "unco' guid," he has gone on providing his people with excellent performances of sacred music, and attracting crowds to his church who would otherwise, perhaps, have gone to no church at all. In the next place, we find the Wesleyans making ample musical provision in aid of their remarkable missionary effort at the West End. Regarding the prospective success of that mission we have no desire to express an opinion, but one thing is certain—the upshot will be none the less satisfactory because music takes a prominent part. It is a simple fact that we are only beginning to find out the value of music as an agency that "maketh for righteousness." In the divine art we have one of the most powerful of weapons for the regeneration of the masses, and, whenever it is taken in hand, there is no more agreeable duty than that of proclaiming the fact as an example for imitation.

Madame Otto Goldschmidt (Jenny Lind) is suffering from severe illness, necessitating her removal from London to the country. Absolute rest and quiet have been ordered by her medical attendant. Madame Goldschmidt has been for some time in ill-health, but it is hoped that her present severe indisposition may be only temporary. She is not allowed to see any visitors at present. At the time of our going to press we learn that her condition is slightly improved.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The 164th Meeting of the Three Choirs, traditionally so called, took place at Worcester on the 4th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th ult. It was organised as usual, and, therefore, very little space need be allotted to particulars regarding patrons, stewards, committees, and so forth. Enough that there seemed to be no abatement of public sympathy with the occasion, and that somewhere about 250 gentlemen consented to be responsible for any deficit that might arise upon the working of the enterprise. A word is due, however, to the complete accord which reigned everywhere throughout the proceedings. Clericals and laymen, the authorities of the Cathedral and of the city were all as one in securing a good result, and no Festival could have gone off more agreeably.

The musical equipment of the Festival gave rise to a little friendly discussion upon its merits. Not that the orchestra of eighty performers, led by Mr. Carrodus, was in question, nor that anybody objected to the composition of the chorus, in which were nearly four score picked singers from Leeds. On these points the utmost satisfaction was felt, but the question distinctly arose as to the non-engagement of Madame Patey and Mr. Santley, whom the dissatisfied professed to regard as indispensable to the necessary excellence of means. No doubt there was much to be said in favour of their view, but, per contra, the committee could urge that the absence of these artists did not affect the attendance of the public in any appreciable degree, and that a considerable saving was effected by the course taken. The principal vocalists actually engaged were Madame Albani, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hope Glenn, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Brereton, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Dr. Colborne, of Hereford Cathedral, presided at the organ, and Mr. C. Lee Williams, of Gloucester Cathedral, assisted the veteran Worcester organist, Mr. Done, in his responsible task as Conductor. On the whole, with these arrangements, there was not much to complain about, and the result to a large extent justified them.

The work of the Festival began with a Special Service in the Cathedral on Sunday morning, September 4. It being the custom on this solemn occasion for the orchestra and chorus to take part, there is a strong desire on all hands to be present. The great church was, therefore, crowded in every available part long before the proceedings began, and a very imposing spectacle it presented, especially when the Mayor and Corporation, in full civic state, advanced up the nave, headed by the green and gold banner of the "faithful city." The procession of the clergy followed, to the strains of Mendelssohn's March in "Athalie," and the full morning service was then proceeded with. We are concerned here only with the music, but even that does not fairly come up for criticism. An act of worship is something quite other than an entertainment. However, we may say that Handel's Dettingen "Te Deum" received a moderately good rendering under Mr. Done's direction, the solos being taken by Mrs. Glover Eaton, Mr. Smith, Mr. Dyson, and Mr. Brereton. The anthem was Handel's "Zadok the Priest," introduced in recognition of the Queen's Jubilee, and finally the congregation sang "O worship the King," to the well known tune "Hanover." A word regarding the sermon preached by Dean Gott from the text "Thy gift to the altar." It contained nothing apologetic on behalf of the Festival—the time for that has passed—but rather made prominent, not to say ostentatious, avowal of the great mission entrusted to music in connection with religious observances and sacred buildings. The whole discourse was instinct with the spirit of liberality and common sense which happily is finding its way into what are called orthodox pulpits, and there "making for righteousness" in a very effective manner. The offertory at this service amounted to £77 14s.—a ridiculously small sum, representing an average contribution from the 3,500 people of a fraction more than fivepence per head.

Monday having been devoted to prolonged and assiduous rehearsal, the regular business of the week began, on Tuesday morning, with a performance of "Elijah," that Oratorio resuming its place at the head of the entire scheme. In 1884 it was deposed and relegated to Wednesday evening in favour of Gounod's "Redemption." No objection arose to that at the time, and certainly no cavil was heard against a return to the old plan. It should be noted, however, that the attendance scarcely came up to the usual "Elijah" mark, mayhap on account of the absence of two famous singers whose names are inseparably connected with that work. The performance does not call for detailed notice. Everybody can imagine an average rendering of "Elijah," and estimate the value of the service put in by artists like Mesdames Albani, Anna Williams, Hope Glenn, and Eleanor Rees, Messrs. Lloyd and Watkin Mills. Nor is it difficult to understand the reasons why some of the musical numbers suffered by being taken too slowly. The venerable Conductor, Mr. Done, cannot be expected to show the vigour and animation of a younger man, and allowance was fairly due on that account, though none could be extended to a slip made by the organ in "Behold, God the Lord passed by." This nearly resulted in catastrophe. The attendance at "Elijah" was 2,321 and the collection £276 11s. 2d. In 1884 the figures were 2,771 and £395 3s. 7d.

At the evening Concert in the Public Hall—an inconvenient building accommodating no more than 800 or 900 persons—Sullivan's "Golden Legend" was the great attraction. There had, from the first, been a general run upon the tickets for this performance, all of them being taken up long before the day arrived. In consequence, hundreds of later applicants were disappointed, though they would willingly have paid double prices for a seat. The laws of matter are inexorable, and one is that two bodies cannot be in the same place at the same time. Of course, not a place was vacant. All the fashion of Worcester and its neighbourhood filled the hall, and gave to the scene what may be styled an air of Festival distinction. The performance was conducted by Mr. C. L. Williams, with Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills as principal singers, and the Leeds people as chorus. On the whole, the rendering of Sullivan's popular Cantata proved effective. The orchestra, not taking into account the smallness of the room, was sometimes much too noisy; but having said this, no further serious objection remains to urge, so well did the Gloucester conductor marshal and control forces individually competent to an interpretation of exceptional merit. Miss Anna Williams earned good opinions by her careful and often very feeling delivery of Elsie's music, which, we believe, she had not previously attempted on an occasion of importance. Mr. Lloyd was faultless as the Prince, and it may be said for Mr. Mills that, doing what others had failed to accomplish, he made himself distinctly heard above the composer's powerful accompaniments. The Leeds chorus gave the concerted pieces magnificently. Nothing could have been better than their execution of the Evening Prayer, and "O pure in heart." So the "Golden Legend" passed off well, and scored another triumph. Everybody was delighted; everybody applauded. A short, yet too long, selection followed the Cantata. It included Mozart's Symphony in G minor; the scena "Where sets the sun" ("Story of Sayid"), ably sung by Mr. McGuckin; a part-song for the Yorkshire chorus, &c. The attendance was 811. In 1884 it was 606.

The Cathedral programme of Wednesday morning was almost more of cloying beauty than could be endured. It comprised Schubert's Mass in E flat, Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and Spohr's "Last Judgment"—a veritable embarrassment of sensuous music. But the public, as was to be expected, felt its attraction, and attended in unwonted numbers, the second morning being usually a weak one on these occasions. It is hard to say which work made the deepest impression; there could, however, be no doubt that the Mass "went home" to all who heard it. With this the contrapuntal numbers—always weak where Schubert is concerned—may have had little to do, but in such movements as the Christe Eleison, the Miserere Nobis, the Incarnatus, and the Benedictus, to mention no others, the master's command of the elements of beauty in music is exercised with a wonderful effect of solemnity and pathos. Schubert dominates when it is a question of tender feeling. Every heart responds to him and is willingly subdued. Moreover, no musical knowledge is required to this end. The most ignorant listener feels in common with the most cultured, if not to the same extent. For these reasons the E flat Mass was a great success at Worcester. People who had never heard the work before were everywhere talking about it. They carried away from the Cathedral an abiding impression. Yet the performance stopped short at some degrees below perfection. Mr. Done's tempi were again open to objection on the score of slowness; at least one of the trombones seemed to be afflicted with vagaries, and the ensemble was at times unsteady. All the same, the performance deserved more praise than blame. No fault could be found with the solos as delivered by Madame Albani, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. McGuckin, Mr. Dyson, and Mr. Brereton, while many of the concerted numbers lost in interpretation little or nothing of their legitimate effect. The sensation made by the Mass was well sustained in Mendelssohn's lovely hymn, the solo of which had all possible advantage by being entrusted to Madame Albani, who, affected perhaps by the place, sang it with more than customary depth of expression and purity of style. She was well supported by the chorus. With reference to the "Last Judgment," so often heard at these Festivals, it will suffice to record that an effective rendering, conducted by Mr. Williams, owed much of its character to the exertions of the soloists—Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. McGuckin, and Mr. Mills. The honours lay with the tenor, who, having the best opportunity, made the most of it. On this occasion the number present was 1,962, and the amount collected £195 11s. 2d., in both respects a marked advance upon 1884, when the figures stood at 1,390 and £119 18s.

The improvement just noted was not sustained at the evening performance, in the Cathedral, on the same day. In 1884, "Elijah" was heard by 2,988 persons, who contributed £69 to the charity. On the occasion now under review "The Redemption" attracted an audience of 2,255, by whom £45 11s. 4d. was given. It would be risky to draw conclusions from a state of things liable to many influences, but the facts must stand on record, as must another absolute truth—that Gounod's Trilogy seemed to make more than its usual profound impression, as a generally efficient performance went on. This, however, could have surprised nobody who gave the matter a thought, because the deeply solemn music was heard amid surroundings absolutely perfect in their propriety.

The beautiful interior of Worcester Cathedral is impressive at any time, but most of all when lighted up for evening service, when its vastness appears vaster and its solemnity is deepened by the vagueness of shadow and the darkness of remote spaces. Under such conditions the music of "The Redemption" gained strength that enabled it to touch the secret springs of emotion with a firmer hand than in the garish light of day. Anyhow, it did move the congregation deeply; none the less because of a performance in which Madame Albani and Mr. Lloyd repeated a success now familiar all over the country. The other soloists were Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Brereton, and Mr. Watkin Mills, by each of whom conscientious work was done. Mr. C. L. Williams conducted with the skill and judgment that never fail him on occasions so important.

Thursday morning brought the great event of the Festival—the production of Mr. Cowen's "Ruth"—under the composer's direction. For once a novelty at these Festivals excited a widespread and genuine interest. So much had become apparent long before, thanks to a brisk demand for tickets; but it may be that the most sanguine did not anticipate the actual strength of the congregation. The new work was heard by 2,603 persons, as against 2,094 on the corresponding morning in 1884, while the donations to the charity amounted to £219 19s. 3d. as against £170 18s. 6d. "Ruth," therefore, appeared in the light of a good investment on the part of the committee, and the fact may have an important influence on future policy. At the same time, we must bear in mind that composers with the special popularity of Mr. Cowen cannot be "turned on" at any time, nor can musician and subject be always so admirably suited to each other as in the present case. But let the future take care of itself; enough now that "Ruth" was a great success, and started on its career amid the unanimous sympathy of its first audience. The Musical Times for August last contained so full a description and analysis of Mr. Cowen's Oratorio that we are absolved from the duty of saying anything here of a similar nature. At the same time, we must declare, as a matter of simple justice, that the expectations raised by study of the score in advance of the performance were more than realised on hearing the music. We shall not be expected to say that "Ruth" is faultless. Indeed, if called upon to enter into details once again, we should be constrained to indicate more than one characteristic obviously open to improvement. But all blemishes apart, the Oratorio is a remarkable work—remarkable in its sympathetic expression, its vivid tone-colouring, the beauty and originality of its themes, and its strong dramatic force. The fact is clear that Mr. Cowen was, at the time of composition, entirely in accord with his subject. Only such a happy state of things can explain the genuineness, spontaneity, and unaffected expression of music which, coming from the heart of the author, goes to the heart of the auditor. By referring to the August article, the reader can obtain an accurate idea as to the parts of the work and the features in it which made the greatest "hit"; but we would specially mention the dance numbers belonging to the Harvest Feast, since they may have excited apprehension in timid minds. As a matter of fact, these were heard in the Cathedral without the slightest risk. A bare proposition to introduce dance themes into the church would excite as much consternation as a lion among ladies, but the dance movements in Ruth" so grow out of, and so naturally belong to, a situation in which gratitude to Divine Providence is the predominant feeling that even fastidious tastes, if honest ones, are not shocked. The objectors, if any there be, should clear their minds of cant. They go to church and devoutly sing "Praise Him with the timbrel and dance." They must imply by this, if anything, that the ancient Hebrew exercise was not profane. In "Ruth" we have the ancient Hebrew exercise; neither more nor less, and it is not profane, but distinctly religious. Comment was suggested by other features in the Oratorio, but for the present we forbear. Another hearing may somewhat affect opinion, if only by strengthening impressions already made. The performance gave much satisfaction. Everybody concerned appeared to do his best, and principals, orchestra, and chorus may alike be congratulated upon a fortunate issue. The leading parts were thus distributed:—Ruth, Madame Albani; Orpah, Miss Anna Williams; Naomi, Miss Hope Glenn; Boaz, Mr. Lloyd; An Elder, Mr. Watkin Mills. This was, undoubtedly, a strong cast, if not the best that can be conceived. Madame Albani so faithfully suggested the character of the heroine, and sang the music with such taste and skill, that the impersonation deserves to rank among her greatest triumphs. Few who listened will forget the accomplished soprano's delivery of "Intreat me not to leave thee," and "My Father, Thou art the Guide of my youth." It came as near perfection as possible. Miss Williams gave distinction to the small part of Orpah, and Miss Hope Glenn was earnest and painstaking as Naomi. Mr. Lloyd made the most of his chances as Boaz, doing for the music all that his charming talent could accomplish, and Mr. Watkin Mills, with his sonorous organ, well declaimed the utterances of the Elder. With band and chorus quite up to the mark, and the composer in the conductor's place, it is not surprising that the ensemble left none of the beauties of the work unrevealed or even obscured. "Ruth," to sum up, was a success all round. The new Oratorio was followed by the "Hymn of Praise," as to which it will suffice to note Mr. McGuckin's effective rendering of the arduous tenor solos. The other artists were Madame Albani and Miss Eleanor Rees, who sang admirably together in "I waited for the Lord."

The Secular Concert, on Thursday evening, may be dismissed very briefly, its only serious interest arising from Cowen's "Scandinavian" Symphony and Stanford's "Revenge." These were well given, the Leeds chorus again coming off with flying colours, but, of course, neither calls for discussion here. A number of songs &c., made up the balance of the programme, which attracted 680 people. The figures in 1884 were 664.

The Festival closed on Friday morning with, as usual, a performance of "The Messiah," in which most of the leading artists took part. Handel's oratorio drew an audience numbering 2,810—a falling off from that of three years before, when the figures were 3,199. Even a greater diminution was noticeable in the donations, which dropped from £186 12s. to £125 13s. 8d. On the whole, however, the Festivals of 1884 and 1887 fairly balanced themselves in pecuniary matters as they did in things artistic, and Worcester has reason to congratulate herself upon a successful celebration.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Those in office in connection with musical events here are now having their busiest time of the year in arranging and modelling the programmes for the forthcoming musical season, the initial performance of which may be said to take place on the 4th inst., when our premier society, the Philharmonic, gives the first of its usual twelve annual Concerts. The chorus has been rehearsing vigorously for the past month some of the principal works to be rendered near the commencement of the season. Perhaps the following prospectus of the principal items for performance during the season 1887-8 may be read with interest:—

First Concert, 4th inst.—Beethoven's Symphony (No. 5) in C minor; Violin Concerto (No. 8) in A minor, by Spohr; Soli Violin (a) Adagio in E (Mozart), (b) Prelude in E (Bach), both with orchestra; Polonaise with Chorus from Glinka's "Life for the Czar." Vocalist, Miss Trebelli; solo violin, Madame Norman-Néruda.

Second Concert, 18th inst.—Goldmark's Symphony, "A Rustic Wedding"; a Pianoforte Concerto not yet selected, and Wagner's March and Chorus, "Hail, bright abode" (Tannhäuser). Vocalist, Miss Pauline Cramer; solo pianoforte, Josef Hofmann.

Third Concert, November 8.—Sullivan's "Golden Legend," conducted by the composer, and Stanford's "Revenge," both for the first time in Liverpool. Vocalists, Madame Nordica, Miss Emily Winant; Messrs. Edward Lloyd and Watkin Mills.

Fourth Concert, November 22.—Haydn's "Letter T" Symphony in E flat, for the first time here; a Pianoforte Concerto, and a chorus for female voices from Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," entitled, "Wreathe ye the steps." Vocalist, Madame Marian McKenzie. Solo pianoforte, Mr. Charles Hallé.

Fifth Concert, December 6.—New Symphony (No. 5) in F, by Cowen, for the first time here; Mendelssohn's setting to the 114th Psalm, and a March with chorus from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba." Vocalist, Madame Albani.

Sixth Concert, December 20.—Handel's "Messiah." Vocalists, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey; Messrs. Edward Lloyd and Bridson.

Seventh Concert, January 10, 1888.—Symphony in B flat, by Svendsen, for the first time here, and a Pianoforte Concerto. Vocalist, Miss Hope Glenn. Solo pianoforte, Mr. Schönberger.

Eighth Concert, January 24.—Spohr's Symphony "The Power of Sound," and a March and chorus from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," entitled "Crown ye the altars." Vocalist, Miss Louise Lablache.

Ninth Concert, February 7.—Mozart's Symphony (No. 7) in C; Pianoforte Concerto (No. 4) in G major, by Beethoven; Lloyd's Cantata "Hero and Leander," for the first time here. Vocalists, Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Solo pianoforte, Miss Fanny Davies.

Tenth Concert, February 28.—Rossini's "Moses in Egypt," for the first time here. Vocalists, Misses Thudichum, Marianne Fenna, and Hilda Wilson; Messrs. Edward Lloyd, Harper Kearton, Henry Piercy, Bridson, and Santley.

Eleventh Concert, March 20.—Spohr's "Fall of Babylon," for the first time here. Vocalists, Misses Mary Davies and Eleanor Rees; Messrs. Edward Lloyd, Harper Kearton, Henry Pope, and Bridson.

Twelfth Concert, April 10.—Symphony (No. 4) in E minor, by Brahms, for the first time here. Vocalist not yet engaged. Solo pianoforte, Mr. Charles Hallé. The last-named gentleman will conduct as usual.

As mentioned in the July Liverpool letter to The Musical Times, Mr. Charles Hallé is giving his usual series of eight Concerts, beginning on November 1. The following Symphonies will be performed during the season:—Beethoven, the "Pastoral"; Berlioz, the "Fantastique"; Brahms, No. 2, in D major; Schubert, in C major; Dvorák, No. 2, in D minor; Haydn, No. 5, in D major; Mozart, No. 5, in D; Schumann, in D minor, the four last-named being for the first time in Liverpool. Many further novelties are to be introduced. The musical public here have suffered a disappointment owing to the non-performance of Dr. Joseph Parry's opera "Blodwen," on Bank Holiday last, as advertised. The performance of the opera has been unavoidably postponed until later in the season.

There is nothing to record with respect to the music at the Royal Jubilee Exhibition here, except that the Conductor of the permanent orchestra, Mr. A. E. Bartle, has lately introduced Pianoforte Concertos into the programmes, himself presiding at that instrument.

Mr. J. W. Turner commenced a week's engagement with his English Opera Company, on the 19th ult., at the Alexandra Theatre, in this city. The operas performed were "The Bohemian Girl" (twice), "Maritana," "Fra Diavolo," "The Lily of Killarney," and "La Sonnambula." The company is one of all-round excellence, and includes among other names those of Josephine Yorke, Constance Bellamy, Henry Walsham, Albert McGuckin, and J. W. Turner. The company has drawn to the theatre crowded audiences, and by their frequent and unstinted applause the popularity of the engagement has been proved. The Liverpool musical public will look forward with pleasurable anxiety to the next advent of Mr. Turner and his Opera Company here.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

During the summer months there is but little musical activity in the provincial towns, and if we have had here slightly more than the usual bustle, it has not been of a kind needing much comment. At the Exhibition, bands in abundance, from all parts of the kingdom and some portions of the Continent, have enlivened promenaders. A fair average of excellence has been displayed, but we have had no model performances yet. Something further will have to be achieved before anything like perfection may be looked for. During the last month the necessity for reducing the water pressure has led to the discontinuance of the Organ Recitals; but, for about the ten weeks previous, Mr. Pyne gave two performances each day; and a good many notable English players visited us and gave welcome specimens of their powers. Of course, the strangers attacked so large an instrument under great disadvantage; there being, I believe, some difficulty or awkwardness in the arrangements for previous practice; a great pity, considering how very much difference there is among organs, and how necessary it is for an executant to search for the good effects possible upon the particular instrument at which he is seated. Altogether there has been a good deal of playing, but the result has hardly been equivalent to what might have been expected. One decidedly praiseworthy feature has been the brief engagements (two days each) offered to those local players who cared, for so short a time, and under serious disadvantages, to study Messrs. Bishop's large instrument. In the Concert-room—or, rather, in the large orchestra at the end of the nave of the Exhibition proper—short performances of choral music (part-songs, &c.), have been given by the Manchester Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. G. W. Lane; and by the Vocal Society, under Dr. Watson. Unaccompanied vocal music is, however, scarcely suitable for the situation, unless with a choir of very great power.

I am rather surprised that, among the many attractions offered to visitors, choral competitions have not been included; but, if attempted, they should be confined to very large bodies of singers; all delicacies of detail would fail, unless expressed by a considerable number of vocalists. The small corps known as the Blue Hungarian Band continues to attract attention, although the similarity of style pervading the music soon wearies by its persistent eccentricity.

Of the prospects for the winter musical season but little has yet been disclosed. Mr. Hallé's thirtieth season will begin in the last week of this month, and will be conducted on the old lines; except that Herr Beyschlag will take the position of the late Mr. E. Hecht as Mr. Hallé's chorus-master. I hope we shall have a fuller recognition of English music than heretofore. Certainly Mr. Cowen's "Ruth" could not be withheld; and we should like to hear his Welsh Symphony under adequate conditions. Mr. De Jong will start his Concerts on the Saturday following the close of the Exhibition—November 12.

No prospectus of the Concert Hall plans has yet been given out, except that Mr. Hallé will give, on the 3rd inst., his first Recital for the season. The suburban choral societies are having their annual meetings and beginning to inquire about suitable works; probably they will produce more novelties than will be heard in our larger halls.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The long musical drought is evidently breaking up here, and in anticipation of the welcome storm which will burst upon us in the course of the next few weeks, we have already had a few light but acceptable showers in the shape of operatic performances, both serious and comic, by way of overture. The Carl Rosa Company, who started their autumn season a week earlier than usual, have not brought any absolute novelty with them this time, but the opera of "Masaniello," which was played on the 21st ult., for the first time here in a complete form, is evidently better than a good many novelties in the opinion of local opera-goers, to whom the overture and principal melodies have long been familiar as household words. The other works performed have been "Carmen," "Trovatore," "Maritana," "Lucia di Lammermoor," and "The Bohemian Girl." In addition to such established favourites as Madame Marie Roze, Madame Georgina Burns, Miss Marian Burton, Mr. Leslie Crotty, Mr. Valentine Smith, Mr. John Child, Mr. Max Eugene, and Mr. F. H. Celli, the company included this time some new-comers of more than ordinary pretensions, among whom should be named Miss Fanny Moody, who played Elvira in Auber's work, and Mr. Francesco Runcio, a tenore robusto, who was quite at home in the part of the revolutionary fisherman. Madame Roze as Carmen and Leonora, and Madame Burns as Lucia, Arline, and Maritana, fairly divided between them the principal honours in different styles, and showed that they had lost nothing in charm or vocal skill since their previous visit here. The only production calling for mention in the domain of comic opera has been the "Pepita," of Charles Lecocq, which was given here for the first time on the 12th ult., by the company of Messrs. Van Biene and Lingard.

Coming events, however, promise musical matter of more importance. The last campaign of the Festival Choral Society was an unsuccessful one, resulting, according to the Society's report, in "a very heavy pecuniary loss," and their new scheme has evidently been devised with a view to prevent a repetition of this unfortunate experience. It is not in mortals, of course, to command success, but the Festival Choral Society's Committee are doing better by deserving it, their programme being under every aspect the most attractive and interesting which they have put forward for many seasons. In the first place, we are promised an entirely new work by the composer of the "Holy City," and there can be no doubt, from an examination of the vocal and pianoforte score, that Mr. A. R. Gaul's new Cantata "Joan of Arc" is calculated to sustain, if not to advance, the composer's already high reputation. On the same evening (the 13th inst.) which witnesses the production of this important novelty, the first part of Dr. Villiers Stanford's Oratorio "The Three Holy Children," entitled "By the waters of Babylon," will be performed. For the second Concert, which takes place on November 10, Berlioz's dramatic legend "Faust" has been selected. Dvorák's thrilling Cantata "The Spectre's Bride," followed by Dr. Stanford's Cantata "The Revenge," will be given on February 9, and for the fourth and last Concert, on March 15, a miscellaneous programme is promised, in which Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" will find a place. At Christmas the customary performance of "The Messiah" will be given. For the subscription series the committee have engaged the services of Madame Lilian Nordica, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Minnie Hauk, Madame Henschel, Madame Trebelli, Mr. John Bridson, Mr. Watkin Mills, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Orlando Harley, Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Robert Grice, Mr. D. Price, and Mr. Henry Pope. The band and chorus will consist as usual of 400 performers, under the skilled conductorship of Mr. Stockley.

Mr. Stockley's fifteenth series of orchestral Concerts will comprise as before four performances, for which the following dates have been fixed—viz., October 27, January 26, February 26, and April 19. Full particulars of the selections are not yet forthcoming, but it is intimated that Dr. Villiers Stanford's new "Irish" Symphony and Mr. Cowen's new Symphony, both conducted by their respective composers, will find places in the scheme. The band will consist, as on former seasons, of eighty performers, under the conductorship of Mr. Stockley, with Miss Fanny Davies as solo pianist and Mr. Carrodus as solo violinist. The vocal selections will be contributed by Madame Georgina Burns, Madame Helen Trust, Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Orlando Harley, Mr. Henry Pope, and Mr. Leslie Crotty.

The abandonment of the Saturday Evening Concerts, which was lately resolved upon as a consequence of the unsatisfactory commercial results of the undertaking, has left a void in the round of our musical opportunities which several enterprising caterers are aspiring to fill. It is understood that the Midland Musical Society will occupy several Saturday evenings in the course of the season, with Concerts specially designed for the benefit of the artisan classes, in which oratorio will divide attention with miscellaneous selections. Five evenings have been secured by Mr. Alfred Gilmer, the popular local bandmaster and cornet soloist, for a series of cheap orchestral Concerts at which the instrumental selections will be intermingled with vocal performances. The organ will be in the hands of Mr. George Haliley.

It is full early yet to discuss the arrangements for the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1888, but it may be useful to state here that, in addition to the works already mentioned which have been commissioned for this meeting, the scheme will comprise Beethoven's colossal Mass in D, Bach's Magnificat, Weber's setting of a Hymn by Rochlitz, which is at present new to this country, Berlioz's Requiem, and last, but not least, Handel's Oratorio "Saul," which has been heard here only in a fragmentary form. In connection with the Festival, it may not be out of place to refer here to the late Mr. Thomas Spencer, an amateur of considerable attainments, who has for several Festivals rendered considerable service to the Committee, and whose untimely death, on the 9th ult., at the age of forty-five, is deeply deplored in local musical circles.

MUSIC IN LEEDS, &c.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The time is fast approaching for the commencement of the musical season. Already one or two of the societies in Yorkshire have announced their dates, and the ensuing month will find all of them at work, either in the form of rehearsal or of actual performance. The season promises to equal any of its predecessors. Music lovers in Leeds and Bradford especially have reason to regard the coming season with lively interest.

It is a matter of extreme satisfaction to be able to record the gratifying response which has been extended towards Mr. Rawlinson Ford's scheme of chamber Concerts for another season. At the ballot for seats, which took place the other day, the number of subscribers for the series was found to be nearly double that of last year. Mr. Ford intends to give ten Concerts, which are to begin on the 19th inst. and to conclude on the 21st of March. This extension of the scheme will not be allowed to impair the merit of the Concerts, at all of which the best artistic talent will be brought to bear. The Philharmonic Society, which Mr. Alfred Broughton continues to conduct, is to give three Concerts. The first of the series will take place on November 9, when Mr. Prout's Cantata "Hereward" will be produced, with Miss Marriott, Miss Clara Leighton, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Wm. Riley as principals. "St. John the Baptist" will be given in February, and arrangements are in progress. Madame Albani, Madame Patey, Mr. Seymour Jackson, and Mr. Watkin Mills have been retained for "The Messiah" performance in December, which is announced as "an extra." Special pains have been taken with the band and chorus, which will number 400 performers. Herr Schiever will take part at each Concert as leader of the band, and Mr. S. Liddle is to preside at the organ. Mr. Haddock and Herr Christensen may be expected to be active again in the element of chamber music. Herr Christensen's scheme for the establishment of a Conservatoire in Leeds gains ground, and begins the season with a flourish, if the list of professors whose services have been requisitioned as teachers is of any account. The popular Saturday Concerts at the Coliseum, which by reason of their cheapness and the versatility of the talent engaged met with great success last season, will be resumed by Mr. Lane. Other societies, such as the Choral Society and the Temperance Choral Society, are also at work.

Bradford is once more to be favoured with the enterprise of Mr. W. B. Sewell, whose striking performances of last winter commanded so much attention. The Concerts which he gave left him with a deficit, several masterpieces, including Berlioz's "Messe des Morts," having been produced at popular prices, which failed to meet the enormous expenses of their production. Mr. Sewell's aim is to establish a local orchestra of which the town, and indeed the West Riding generally, is very much in need, and with moderate encouragement there is every reason to believe he would succeed. During the summer, a portion of his orchestra has had a permanent engagement at the Yorkshire Exhibition, where its performances have invariably proved attractive. As far as regards the coming winter, Mr. Sewell's venture has not met with the public support it deserves, but he proposes to give seven Concerts, if the public show any desire to support him. The orchestral music of the greatest masters will be presented, and it is intended to augment the size of the orchestra to seventy performers. Two extra nights are spoken of for the production of works by Berlioz, possibly the "Requiem" and the "Te Deum." The prospectus also mentions Dr. Stanford's Irish Symphony, and Choral Ballad "The Revenge" among other works.

The Subscription Concerts Committee, thanks to the prosperity which has ever attended their operations, have issued an attractive prospectus for their twenty-third season. The ordinary series comprises six Concerts, but there is to be an extra performance free to subscribers. The opening Concert, in October, will be devoted to "The Golden Legend," for which Madame Albani—who was so conspicuously associated with the original production at the Leeds Festival, and with its performance in Berlin—Mr. Edward Lloyd, Miss Winant, and Mr. Watkin Mills have been retained. Orchestral Concerts will be given by Mr. Hallé's band in November, January, and March, the arrangements for which are in progress. Professor Joachim will pay his annual visit in March, and Madame Nordica and Madame Trebelli will be engaged for one or other of the Orchestral Concerts. There is to be but one Chamber Concert, namely, in December, for which Schubert's Octet is promised. In addition to the opening Concert in October, a choral Concert is announced for February, at which will be given Verdi's "Requiem." Madame de Fonblanque, who took part in a former production of the work eight years ago, will again be heard in the contralto music, and the other artists engaged for the occasion are Miss Annie Marriott, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Gilbert Campbell. The one Ballad Concert of the series is to be given at the end of January. Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, Miss Hope Glenn, and Mr. Edward Lloyd may be expected to make the event an attractive one. Among other items mentioned as likely to be heard during the season are Cowen's recent Symphony, a chorus from "Belshazzar," and a piece by Becker. The time is, however, early enough for detail, many of which are yet in process of consideration.

The Bradford Festival Choral Society, under their new Conductor, Dr. Bridge, of Chester, is to assist the Subscription Concerts Committee at their two choral Concerts, and, in addition, have a series of their own to get through. The first Concert of the Society is to be given in November. The programme is somewhat novel—madrigals and glees of English writers, from the earliest to the present period, including Morley, Weelkes, Benet, Pearsall, and Bishop. The setting of Lord Tennyson's ballad "The charge of the Light Brigade," by the late Conductor of the Society, Mr. Hecht, will also be produced. "The Messiah" will be given in December, and a Concert will also be given during the Spring.

Mr. Edward Misdale and Mr. S. Midgley are both engaged in the promotion of Chamber Concerts. Mr. Misdale has engaged the services of Mr. John Dunn, the popular violinist, and Mr. Midgley is reported to have in hand the establishment of a Ladies' Choral Society.

Josef Hofmann, the youthful prodigy upon whom a good deal of praise was bestowed in respect of his achievements in London, paid a visit to Halifax on the 19th ult., under the auspices of Mr. J. H. Sykes. The boy gave a really wonderful exhibition of his powers, chiefly of course in the direction of nimbleness of finger, in pieces like Mendelssohn's "Spinnerlied," the Chopin-Liszt "Chant Polonaise," and two of Chopin's pieces. On the other hand, three little pieces of his own composition—a Souvenir, a Mazurka, and a Polonaise—testified to qualities of head as well as of hand. Miss Annie Chester took part as vocalist with fair success. Master Hofmann had a fairly large audience and a very enthusiastic one.

The first of a very important series of Subscription Concerts, arranged by Mr. John Watkinson, was held at Huddersfield on the 20th ult. The series will comprise fourteen, at every one of which will be found music and musicians of the highest class. In addition there is to be a musical festival in honour of the Queen's Jubliee, for the benefit of the local charities. At the latter, which will take place on November 2, "The Golden Legend" will be produced, with Madame Albani, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills as principals. Dr. C. V. Stanford's work "The Revenge" is also announced for performance along with Sir Arthur Sullivan's work at the morning performance, and in the evening will be given an orchestral Concert, with Madame Albani as vocalist. Mr. Charles Hallé's orchestra is to supply the orchestral music, and the chorus will comprise members of the Huddersfield Choral Society. The arrangements for the series of Subscription Concerts are complete, and variety will be introduced as much as possible in the character of the music to be provided. At the opening Concert, on the 20th ult., which was a Chamber Concert, the executants included the Skinner Quartet—namely, Miss Emily Skinner (first violin), Miss Lucy Stone (second violin), Miss Cecilia Gates (viola), and Miss Florence Hemmings (violoncello). Master Josef Hofmann also appeared as solo pianist, and in piano duets with his father, Professor Casimis Hofmann. Miss Adelaide Mullen and Mr. Henry Beaumont were the vocalists. In Mendelssohn's E minor Quartet, Miss Skinner's combination demonstrated the possession of great delicacy and refinement, and the ensemble playing was almost perfect. The finished performance of the leader of the combination was especially to be commended. Master Hofmann's performances created quite a furore. Miss Mullen and Mr. Beaumont both contributed much to the success of an excellent Concert.

An event of unusual interest will be the production, at Huddersfield, of a new work by Mr. E. Prout, called "The Red Cross Knight." The work has been specially written for the Huddersfield Choral Society, which last season, it may be remembered, gave Mr. Prout's "Hereward," which has already attained much popularity. The new work is in active rehearsal under Mr. Prout's supervision, and will be produced at the first of the Choral Society's Concerts. Musicians who have had an opportunity of judging speak very highly of the music, and the production is awaited with much interest.

The Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society are arranging a series of Concerts for the season.

MUSIC IN THE WEST.

(From our own Correspondent.)

During the summer months there have been no concerts of importance given in Clifton or Bristol, and it is therefore our office this month rather to cast a look forward towards the possibilities of the coming season, than to chronicle past events. At the same time we must not forget that we were invited to listen to some very pleasant music out of doors, performed by an excellent band which was got up by public subscription, and which, we are glad to be able to add, proved, financially as well as musically, a decided success. Very admirable programmes were frequently presented and were attentively listened to by the vast numbers of our citizens who congregated around the stand on summer evenings, whether on our beautiful downs or in other parts of Clifton or Bristol. The places and hours of performance were so arranged as to bring the music within reach of all, and the particulars were fully announced beforehand, so that it was quite the exception when a large audience was not present. The music chosen was nearly all of the "popular" type, but was, as a rule, good of its kind; and it certainly gave genuine pleasure to the auditors. The members of the band numbered over forty, and were under the able conductorship of Mr. Frederick Watts, well known in our city both as violinist and conductor. We shall look forward to a renewal of these pleasant gatherings next year.

For the present month, the Bristol Musical Festival Society announce two grand Concerts on the 21st and 22nd inst. The selected works are Dvorák's Cantata "The Spectre's Bride," which is certainly calculated to show the calibre of any choir; Dr. Villiers Stanford's

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

There are choruses in "Ruth" which surprise the candid and intelligent observer, to whom the natural bent of the composer's genius is no secret. Here, indeed, we have the handler of the goldsmith's delicate tools wielding the hammer of Thor and bringing it down to some purpose, revealing strength, energy, and decision for the exact measure of which few could have been prepared. . . . There now remains only to congratulate the composer upon a successful achievement, and upon the favour with which the work was obviously received by a profoundly attentive audience.

THE MORNING POST.

There is beautiful music enough in "Ruth" to make the reputation of the composer had it not already been made.

THE DAILY NEWS.

No better subject for his first essay could have been afforded than that which he has chosen. The pretty pastoral idyl of "Ruth" was exactly what was needed for the exercise of his graceful fancy, his vein of refined and winning melody, and his skill in delicate picturesque orchestration.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

Mr. Frederic Cowen's Oratorio "Ruth" is in every way creditable to British musical art. It is a worthy addition to the list of works with which we may "speak with the enemies in the gate" and "not be ashamed."

THE GLOBE.

There could be no doubt of the success which Mr. Cowen has in this instance achieved. . . . It is a work which will worthily sustain the great reputation honourably won by its composer.

THE SUNDAY TIMES.

As regards originality, loftiness of aim and achievement, and freedom and force of expression, it is head and shoulders above any choral work that has previously issued from the same pen.

LONDON & NEW YORK: NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

setting of "The Revenge," which, with its distinct and taking melodies, will be sure to be popular, and will moreover give to the tenors and basses "that which they love"—namely, several opportunities of showing the power and quality of their voices, undimmed by the tones of treble or alto. Sir Arthur Sullivan's Cantata, "The Golden Legend," is to be given as well as "The Revenge" at the second Concert, and if the Festival choir should come out from such an ordeal unscathed, it will certainly be a grand triumph, and will entitle this body of vocalists to a place second to none among provincial choirs. To attain such a result, however, it will be necessary that they look well to their weapons during the interval that remains before the Concerts. Mr. D. W. Rootham, the excellent chorus-master, is making every effort to achieve "un grand succès," and if hearty and patient effort can compass it, we need not doubt of its being accomplished. The principal vocalists will be Madame Albani, Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Emily Winant, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley. Mr. George Riseley will be the organist. The one fault we have to find with the conduct of these Festival Concerts is that outsiders are asked to perform work which could fairly be done by musicians in our midst, and that these latter are relegated to positions of little credit or importance, and are expected "therewith to be content." It is as if we possessed no organist capable of doing more than filling in with a few chords now and then, and not more than, perhaps, one violinist and one cellist worthy of a place in the orchestra. But this leads us on to the next point in the plans for the season, which is a very sad one—namely, that we can no longer speak of "our orchestra."

It appears that the guarantors' fund is so nearly exhausted as to compel the Committee of the Monday Popular Concerts Society to the mournful decision of giving no Concerts during the winter. Comment is hardly needed, and the fact will best speak for itself as to the love for the highest types of music thus manifested by the body of our citizens. They will evidently "have none of it," and perhaps it is only to the few real lovers of true art amongst us to whom this announcement will come as a great blow, detracting materially from the anticipated pleasures of the season. Still we entertain a faint hope that the Concerts will be missed even by the careless "many," if only as places of resort in which to stare at their neighbours, and that possibly some effort may be made to revive them, perhaps after Christmas.

We are glad to be able to state that Mrs. Viner Pomeroy's Classical Chamber Concerts are to be continued, and we trust that they will receive adequate support. It is intended to give four Concerts during the winter, and the following works are among those selected for performance:—Spohr's Quintet for piano and strings; G. A. Macfarren's Quintet for piano, violin, viola, violoncello, and contra-bass; Brahms's Quintet (Op. 26) for piano and strings; Schubert's Trio in B flat; Scharwenka's Sonata for piano and violoncello; Beethoven's Sonata in G major, for piano and violin. The executants will be the same as usual, with Mr. Henry Holmes as first violin.

The Bristol Musical Association begin their work for the season by giving their first Concert on the 1st inst., particulars of which will appear in our letter next month.

At Exeter, the musical fixtures, so far as is at present decided, will be as follows:—The Oratorio Society will give Gaul's "Holy City" at their Christmas Concert; the Western Counties Musical Association will give, at its annual Festival Concerts, Dr. Edwards's work "The Ascension," Mendelssohn's "Athalie," and Dr. Stanford's setting of "The Revenge." The same Society had announced an amateur performance of Flotow's "Martha," at the New Theatre in December, but this plan has been effectually disposed of by the sad calamity which has befallen the city in the burning of the theatre and the terrible loss of life occasioned thereby.

The Madrigal Society has suspended operations for the present year, owing to lack of voices. It is to be hoped that the suspension may be only temporary, the Society having done good work in its particular department for many years past.

The Organ Recitals at the Victoria Hall are announced to begin on the 1st inst.

At Salisbury the arrangements for the season are not yet complete, but we are informed that the Sarum Choral Society intend to rehearse Gade's "Zion," with a view to performing it at their next Concert.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The prospectus of our coming musical season promises as yet nothing of extraordinary value. Whether we have grown less ambitious in our aims to provide grand concerts for the people, and to hold ourselves equal in musical culture with other cities; whether it emanates from a decrease of enthusiasm amongst the people themselves; whether it is a reaction from having had too many good things last season; or whether, from a financial point of view, those who were formerly bold are now shy, so much is certain, that the Choral Union Concerts, from eleven to twelve in number, as conducted hitherto for a good many years, have fallen to the ground. They might have died there, and thus have become a thing of the past, but for the speculative enterprise of the local entrepreneurs, Messrs. Paterson and Sons, who picked them up, and now try to revive at least four of the Orchestral Concerts, to be given during the months of December and January under Mr. Manns's conductorship; whilst the Choral Concerts of the old Choral Union, under a new management, are to consist of four performances—viz., Handel's "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," "Hymn of Praise," and "Walpurgisnacht."

Following the respective dates, there are these further Concerts on the tapis. Late in October, the remarkable child-pianist and composer, Josef Hofmann, for a Pianoforte Recital; towards the end of November, Madame Adelina Patti will make her first appearance (somewhat late in the day), supported by Signor Foli, Herr Ganz, and Mdlle. Ganz; a few days after, the charming American artist, Miss Adelaide Detchon, will give her dramatic and musical entertainment; followed in December by Herr Stavenhagen's re-appearance in a Pianoforte Recital. For January and February, Madame Trebelli for a Ballad Concert and Señor Sarasate for a Violin Recital are announced, all under the management of Messrs. Paterson and Sons, whose concert department is under the charge of Mr. J. C. Dibdin. We shall also have the customary Reed Concerts, Dr. Charles Hallé's Pianoforte Recital, the latter promised for November; and, during the same month, the Carl Rosa Opera Company.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND WEST OF SCOTLAND.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The musical season in Glasgow can hardly be said to begin earlier than October, but if I have therefore no reports of Concerts to furnish as yet, I have at least some information to give regarding intended performances, and, what may have a special interest for many of the readers of The Musical Times, I am able to give details of some of the music proposed to be studied by the numerous societies in this district.

The Glasgow Choral Union have fixed on "Elijah," "The Messiah," and "Faust." The season will be a rather shorter one than of late years, but if the choral portion of it is, through force of circumstances, smaller and less immediately interesting than generally hitherto, there is no cause to apprehend a lack of interest in the scheme as a whole. The subscriptions to the guarantee fund, indeed, were liberal and ready, a good proof that the Committee of Management possess the entire confidence of the public. Mr. Manns is re-engaged as Conductor, and Mr. Joseph Bradley of Manchester has been appointed to the vacant post of chorus-trainer. Details of the instrumental Concerts will duly appear.

The West of Scotland Choral Society, conducted by Mr. H. A. Lambeth, intend giving a performance of "Elijah" during the season. The membership is between one and two hundred. Very curiously, Mr. Joseph Barnby's beautiful Oratorio "Rebekah," rather neglected as it has been in this quarter, is to be placed under study by three different societies: Bridgeton Choral Union, with a member ship of 250 voices, and under the care of Mr. George Taggart; John Street United Presbyterian Church Choir, and Dennistoun United Presbyterian Church Choir.

The South Side Choral Society, true to its almost unvarying taste, has decided on Handel's "Esther." The Musical Association of Langside Free Church (Mr. McKay, Conductor) is to take up (in addition, no doubt, to its study of sacred music) Parker's Cantata "Silvia." The Glasgow Temperance Choral Society, which is flourishing under the direction of Mr. W. H. Murray, will this season essay Gaul's new historical Cantata "Joan of Arc." The Glasgow Academy Choir have had a Cantata (treble voices) written for them by Mr. Allan Macbeth, entitled "Silver Bells," words by E. Oxenford. In addition to the practice of this Mr. Maclaren's accomplished young choristers will make a special study of part music, chiefly, this year, the older form of glees, such as "Come, bounteous May," for alto, tenor, and bass, the latter two voices being supplied by former pupils of the Academy. The Hamilton Choral Union are to study Handel's "Messiah," and Bridge of Weir Society Dr. Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus."

A Choral Union has been formed at Lanark, and Handel's "Messiah" is to be the first subject of study.

The season usually opens in our city with the Saturday Evening City Hall Concerts, under the auspices of the Abstainers' Union. The first and second of the series took place on the 17th and 24th ult., the programmes being of the ballad character, which seems to be as far as it is possible to take these entertainments in an educative musical direction. For the last two or three years the Concerts have been repeated in another and newer part of the city, but these duplicatory performances have not been financially successful, and the series will be confined, meantime, to the City Hall, their original habitat. On the whole, I am glad to say, ballad Concerts cannot be said to be acceptable in Glasgow except among the less musically educated. The Glasgow Select Choir, which usually makes an early appearance in the season, is to give a Concert on November 1.

We are to have a visit from Mr. Charles Hallé shortly for his annual Pianoforte Recital. When in Glasgow, Mr. Hallé is to be the guest of the Society of Musicians. Remarkable to relate, Madame Adelina Patti has only been once in Glasgow, and that so very long ago that the circumstance, if indeed there is no mistake in the matter, is completely forgotten. Our citizens are, however, to have the privilege of hearing this celebrated singer in November next, when she will be supported by Madame Antoinette Sterling, Miss Carpenter, violinist, and other eminent vocalists and instrumentalists. There is also to be a Pianoforte Recital by Mr. Alfred Hollins, on November 25. This clever young pianist, I may mention, performed privately before the members of the Society of Musicians in August, at one of their usual meetings. The Society, by the way, interests itself much in budding musicians, and had the opportunity of hearing a most promising young violinist at their meeting of the 13th ult.—Master Gerald Wallen, Medalist of the Royal Academy of Music.

Organ Recitals were given by Dr. A. L. Peace on Monday evenings in August and September, in the Cathedral, and were fairly well attended.

The Barbour scheme, for the promotion of popular musical education in Paisley, has again been launched, and this year with certain modifications, which are likely to lead to its being still more taken advantage of than even hitherto. A Scholarship is offered, and other encouragements of a like character are given to musical study. Church choir competition is invited, as well as competition in violin and violoncello playing; prizes are offered also for original composition. The scheme has now been five years in operation, with great and increasing success.

MUSIC IN SOUTH WALES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Several Eisteddfodic meetings have been held in the Rhondda Valley districts, but very few of the musical events generally seem to have risen to first-rate importance. The absorbing effect of London proceedings has not altogether passed away.

The preliminary programme of the National Eisteddfod at Wrexham next year will include twenty-nine competitions of a musical character. The test pieces in the chief choral competition are (1) "Cum Sancto Spiritu" (Mozart's "Twelfth Mass"), (2) "Shepherds' Chorus" ("Rosamunde"), and (3) "That God so loved the world we know" (J. S. Bach). The first prize is £100 and a bâton, and the second £20. Choirs to consist of between 120 and 150 voices. In the second choral competition (test pieces in Welsh), a first prize of £50 and a second of £10 are offered. The "Greek War Song" (Dr. J. C. Bridge) and "The long day closes" (Sir Arthur Sullivan) will be the test pieces in the third choral competition. 1st prize, £20; second, £5. There will be three Pennillion singing competitions, a brass band contest, and various instrumental events. Some prizes are also offered for compositions, such as solos, glees, and anthems.

On the 19th ult. a well attended Eisteddfod was held in a large marquee at Pentre, Rhondda Valley, Mr. E. H. Davies in the chair. A prize of £50 was offered for the best rendering of "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel." Five choirs competed, and Blaenewm was successful. The Rhondda Glee Society (Mr. John Broad) was awarded the prize of £12 for the best rendering of "The Martyrs of the Arena." Brass band competition, "The heavens are telling," for a prize of £5. Four bands competed, and that from Sguborwen was victorious. I have on several occasions heard this chorus rendered by local bands in Eisteddfodic competitions, but as a test piece it may be questioned whether it is sufficiently exhaustive. In the competition between brass bands, the subject being on this occasion "O great is the depth," the Ferndale Band took the prize.

The mining village of Penygraig, near Pontypridd, was the scene of an Eisteddfod on the 12th ult. The meeting was held in aid of the Seren Rhondda Benefit Society, and the result financially was, I understand, satisfactory. The musical adjudicator was Mr. D. Jenkins, M.B. The Ynyshir Glee Party (Mr. Gwilym Thomas, Conductor) took the Glee Prize.

A Festival of the Glamorganshire English division of Llandaff Diocesan Church Choral Association was held, on the 1st ult., at St. Augustine's Church, Penarth. Inclement weather prevented the attendance from being as large as was anticipated. To hold the Festival at Penarth—a rising suburb of Cardiff—is a new departure. It generally takes place at Llandaff; but St. Augustine's has such excellent acoustic properties that it was thought a variation in the annual programme might be made as indicated. The choirs included 400 voices. The Conductor was Mr. R. Seaton, the Choirmaster to the Association.

In the meantime the Merthyr Orpheus Society (Mr. W. H. Powell, A.C., Conductor) gave a miscellaneous Concert, on the 22nd ult., at the Temperance Hall, in aid of the Funeral Fund of the Merthyr District of Ivorites. The attendance was fairly large, Dr. James, in the absence of Mr. David Williams, Henstaff Court, presiding.

The Cardiff United Choir, a new organisation, of which the leadership is taken by Mr. J. Williams, performed the Oratorio "Judas Maccabæus" at the Moor Street Congregational Church, Cardiff, on the 21st ult. This somewhat ambitious effort was attended with a great deal of incidental success, and the attendance of the public was very large. The soloists were: Miss Lucy Clarke, Miss S. C. Morris, Eos Morlais, and Mr. R. C. Jenkins. The choir numbered about 150 voices. The orchestral accompaniment was not faultless, but that is not altogether a new feature. Pianist, Mr. E. Bull; Organist, Miss L. Hooper.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, September 6.

The newspapers are full of announcements for the coming musical season in the chief cities of the United States, and managers are everywhere preparing for a peculiarly lively campaign. Unless all appearances are deceiving, the season will surpass in activity and variety all its predecessors. In New York the German Opera overshadows the other institutions; in Boston anticipation is on the qui vive concerning the symphony series under Mr.

Gericke; in Cincinnati the Festival Association is busy with arrangements for the regular biennial Music Festival, which will take place in May, 1888; in Baltimore the Concerts of Mr. Heimendahl, which have materially advanced the culture of that city during the last two seasons, are exciting the attention of amateurs, while the German population is getting ready for one of those monstrous gatherings of male singing societies, at which, as a rule, the musical achievements are in inverse ratio to the quantity of beer drunk; Chicago, pushing, energetic, omniverous as ever, is dividing its attention between its magnificent new music hall, its newly founded library (which has £400,000 at its disposal for the purchase of books), and plans for the next meeting of the Music Teachers' National Association. From this brief summary of what is doing in a few of the larger cities of the country, my English readers may be able to conclude that the old disparity between the intellectual and the commercial and industrial activities of the people of the States is rapidly disappearing.

It would be impossible to convey an idea of the significance and scope of the promises of the musical season in this country in all their bearings, and I must content myself with a hurried outline of such plans as lie before me. To begin with New York as the Metropolis of the country, a few words are due first to the operatic outlook. For the German institution, under the management of the owners of the Metropolitan Opera House, all the plans are complete down to the arrangement of the repertory and the assignment of parts for every night of the season. As last year, so this, Wagner will dominate the list. Next February, when the season comes to an end, there will be only two Wagnerian works, outside of the youthful operas which can only be looked at in the light of curiosities, that will not be familiar to the people of New York. These two are "Rheingold" and "Parsifal." All except these two and "The Flying Dutchman" (which latter has frequently been given in America) will be included in the Metropolitan repertory. "Siegfried" and "Götterdämmerung" will be heard for the first time in the coming season, and during the last two weeks, from February 6 to February 18, all the Nibelung tetralogy, save the prologue, will be twice given in the proper succession of pieces. Naturally the Wagnerites are elate, and a movement is on foot to organise a society to advance general musical culture in accordance with the progressive ideas of the great German poet-composer and æsthetic philosopher. The representations of the Metropolitan company will extend from November 2 till February 18—sixteen weeks—within which time there will be given forty-seven subscription evenings and sixteen matinées. The novelties promised are Wagner's "Siegfried" and "Götterdämmerung," Nessler's "Trompeter von Säkkingen" (a pretty sharp contrast), Spontini's "Ferdinand Cortez," and Weber's "Euryanthe." The rest of the list consists of "Rienzi," "Tannhäuser," "Lohengrin," "Meistersinger," "Tristan und Isolde," "Walküre," "Queen of Sheba" (Goldmark), "Merlin" (likewise Goldmark's), "Prophet," "Fidelio," "Aïda," "La Juive," "Faust," and possibly "Don Giovanni." The doubt touching the performance of the last opera arises from the fact that the season opens a few days too late to enable the management to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of the first performance of Mozart's masterpiece at Prague. In this connection it is interesting to note that a local critic has made a painstaking inquiry into the American life of Lorenzo da Ponte, Mozart's librettist, who lived in this country from 1805 till his death in 1838 (nearly all the time in New York), and has added curious facts to our knowledge of the history of the erratic old poet. Among the investigator's pathetic discoveries is this, that though Da Ponte enjoyed the friendship of many distinguished scholars and men of letters in this city (he was Professor of Italian literature in Columbia College—without salary—from 1825 till his death), some of whom followed him to his grave, the whereabouts of that grave cannot now be determined. With great labour the writer in the Tribune newspaper discovered the cemetery in which, judging from all the circumstances, he must have been buried; but there were no records to indicate the spot in which his grave was dug, and no headstone to mark it.

Not the least interesting of the forthcoming events in the operatic world here will be the opening of the season of the National Opera Company. For some time past the company has been recruiting its forces, and many singers popular in England and on the Continent of Europe have been engaged. Mr. W. Ludwig, well known by his connection with the Carl Rosa Opera Company in England, renews his contract in America, and Mr. Barton McGuckin and others have made engagements. Among other works to be given may be noticed Rubinstein's "Nero," Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba," Wagner's "Lohengrin," and other works in English.

The Concerts of the Philharmonic and Symphony Societies, conducted respectively by Theodore Thomas and Walter J. Damrosch, will take place in the Metropolitan Opera House. Each Society will give six Concerts and the same number of public rehearsals. Herr Seidl, whose terms were not acceptable to the Intendant of the Royal Opera at Berlin, wherefore he accepted a re-engagement here, will also give three Concerts on a large scale. Mr. Van der Stucken will conduct the Concerts in Chickering Hall, and for the week between November 14 and 20 has projected a series of five Concerts, at which none but the compositions of native Americans will be given. At three of the Concerts an orchestra will be employed, and the programmes of the American Festival comprise nearly every form of composition, from a song to a symphony. The plans of the Oratorio Society (Mr. Damrosch, Conductor) contemplate performances of Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion, Handel's "Messiah," and Brahms's "Song of Destiny," the latter a novelty here.

The Handel and Haydn Society will give four Concerts as follows:—December 25, "Messiah"; January 29, Berlioz's "Te Deum" and J. K. Paine's "Ode to the Nativity"; March 4, Bach's "St. Matthew" Passion; Easter Sunday, "Judas Maccabæus." The plans of Mr. Gericke are not yet announced as he has been all summer in Boston.

The Cincinnati Festival, under Mr. Thomas's direction, for which the managers are now negotiating with several English singers of first class repute, will bring forward Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride," beside Rubinstein's "Paradise Lost" and Mendelssohn's "St. Paul." The thirtieth annual Festival of the Worcester County (Massachusetts) Musical Association will take place from the 27th to the 30th of the present month; concerning this, I hope to be able to report next month.

OBITUARY.

Another link which bound the singers of the present with those of the past has been broken by the death of Mr. Thomas Francis, one of the Vicars-Choral of St. Paul's Cathedral, and one of the Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal. He enjoyed pensions from both places upon his retirement from active service eleven years ago, and on the 2nd ult. he breathed his last at his house at Hackney, in the 76th year of his age. As an alto singer he was held in high estimation. He was noted for his reading of the master works of the great church composers presented in the course of his duties in connection with the above-named establishments, and his excellent manner of interpreting the compositions in glee form of the old English writers made his services much sought after. He was one of the professional members of the Noblemen and Gentlemen's Catch Club, the Round, Catch, and Canon Club, and kindred institutions. Miss Williams, Charles Lockey, Henry Phillips, with J. L. Hatton and himself, formed the English Glee and Madrigal Union, whose performances in various parts of the kingdom were justly admired.

We regret to record the death of Mr. Francis Ralph, the esteemed English violinist, which took place on the 8th ult., after a long illness. Mr. Ralph received his musical education at the Royal Academy of Music, and early in life became a prominent member of our leading orchestras. With the assistance of his wife, who as Miss Kate Roberts gained a considerable reputation as a pianist, he gave several interesting series of Chamber Concerts; but of late he devoted himself entirely to teaching, and became one of the most valued professors of the violin at the Royal Academy, where his loss will be distinctly felt. Mr. Ralph was born in 1847 and had just completed his fortieth year.

"In view of the forthcoming winter season, an association is in formation, consisting of amateur vocalists, instrumentalists, and elocutionists, who have co-operated for the purpose of providing entertainments at which they give their services, entirely free of remuneration, for the benefit of soup kitchens, coal funds, and other local charities in London and the suburbs. Concerts will be arranged in weekly series at twelve local centres, embracing all quarters of the metropolis, and with this view the chartering of the following halls is in contemplation, viz.:—Myddleton Hall, Islington, N.; Holloway Hall, Holloway, N.; Shoreditch Town Hall, E.; Royal Park Hall, Camden Town, N.W.; New Manor Rooms, Hackney, E.; Bow and Bromley Institute, Bow, E.; Chatham Hall, Battersea, S.W.; Brixton Hall, Brixton, S.W.; Pimlico Rooms, Chelsea, S.W.; Asembly Rooms, Kensington, W.; Paddington Hall, Paddington, W.; Peckham Public Hall, S.E. From the list of members enrolled in the association, twelve Concert parties will be organised, each of which will make a tour of the twelve halls afore-mentioned, appearing once weekly during a season of twelve weeks, thus providing at each hall an entirely different programme by entirely different artists during each week of the season. The collection and distribution of the funds realized by such entertainments will be entirely in the hands of the local vicars in each district visited." The scheme will afford ample opportunities to aspiring amateurs willing to sacrifice their time and talents on behalf of charitable enterprises, but as the design appears to have originated with private persons and is unsupported by the names of anyone of authority or influence, it is at present more creditable to the philanthropy than to the business capacities of the promoters.

The winter season in Chester is likely to prove a busy one. Dr. Joseph Bridge's excellent Society has now entered upon its fourth season, and since its commencement has given, amongst others, the following works: Handel's "Judas," Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," Gade's "Crusaders," Stanford's "Revenge," as well as the Conductor's own Oratorio, "Daniel." "Paradise and the Peri" will be performed on November 21, and "The Messiah" in Christmas week. These Concerts are always given with full orchestra, composed chiefly of members of Mr. Hallé's band, the choir numbering 150 voices. Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" will be sung in the Cathedral on the occasion of the Harvest Festival, on October 13, and the annual service, with Spohr's "Last Judgment," will take place in Advent. Three oratorios are given each year at special services and are highly appreciated, there being of course no charge for admission, and no offertory, except at the Harvest Festival. The Diocesan Choral Association, formed by the Precentor last year, and ushered in with a fine service, at which 1,100 voices took part, has been doing good work. A branch of it is in formation in nearly every rural deanery in the diocese, three local festivals having been held already this year, the final one taking place in the Cathedral, on All Saints' Day, for the rural deanery of Chester. The Triennial Musical Festival takes place next year, some of the works being already in rehearsal.

A Musical Festival will be held in the Winter Garden, Cheltenham, on the 24th, 25th, and 26th inst., in which Mr. J. A. Matthews' Choral and Orchestral Society will take part. Among the works proposed to be presented are "Elijah," Mendelssohn; the dramatic Cantata, "The Golden Legend," Sir A. Sullivan; a Jubilee Lyric, Sir Herbert Oakeley; and selections from the choral and orchestral works of Gounod, Rossini, Handel, &c., together with the three new part-songs, "Radiant sister of the day," by Miss Ellicott; "If doughty deeds," by Mr. C. L. Williams, of Gloucester; and "The rosy dawn," by Mr. Charles H. Lloyd, composed for the occasion. The artists engaged are Mdlle. Nordica, Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Julia Jones, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Holberry-Hagyard, Mr. R. Grice, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The band and chorus will number 300. Sir Herbert Oakeley and Mr. J. A. Matthews are the Conductors. Mr. Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" and Spohr's "God, Thou art great," will be performed at the Subscription Concerts later in the season.

The prospectus of the Highbury Philharmouic Society announces that four Concerts will be given during the coming season as follows: November 21, Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and Cusins's "Jubilee Ode"; January 23, 1888, Handel's "L'Allegro" and "Il Pensieroso," and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony; March 3, Mendelssohn's "Elijah"; and May 7, Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri" and a miscellaneous programme, including a selection from Bizet's "Carmen." The vocalists for the different Concerts include Miss Anna Williams, Miss Annie Marriott, Mdlle. Antoinette Trebelli, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Eleanor Rees, Miss Marguerite Hall, and Miss Rose Dafforne; Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Piercy, Mr. Chilley, Mr. Banks, Mr. Watkin Mills, Mr. Bridson, Mr. Robert Grice, and Mr. Frank Ward. Mr. J. H. Betjemann will again conduct the Concerts and rehearsals of the Society, and Mr. David Beardwell will assist whenever the band and chorus rehearse separately. Mr. Ellis Roberts will lead the orchestra at the Concerts.

The Members of the Grosvenor Choral Society gave their 187th Monthly Concert at the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace Road, on Friday evening, the 16th ult., when a highly interesting programme was presented and fully appreciated by a large audience. Amongst the part-songs were Distin's two-part song "Merrie Gypsies," with castanet and tambourine obbligato, and Reinecke's Canon "O Beautiful Violet." The soloists were Miss Annie Daymond, Miss Melleos, Miss Whittle, Mr. B. H. Grove, Mr. Mr. L. C. Batten, and Mr. T. Inge. Miss Jessie Davies played a pianoforte solo and joined with the Conductor in a duet. Mrs. T. P. Frame accompanied, together with Mr. C. Gibson and Mr. H. J. Wood; Mr. David Woodhouse conducted. The Society intends giving Callcott's "Golden Harvest" for October Concert, Goring Thomas's "Sun Worshippers" for November, and "The Messiah" in December.

An Organ Recital was given by Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., of Balham, on the 3rd ult., at the Church of St. Barnabas, Kentish Town. The organ, an excellent three-manual instrument, has recently been enlarged, and is now one of the finest in the neighbourhood. The additions comprise a small "Echo" organ, placed in one of the lancet windows of the chancel; a choir manual enclosed in a swell box, and an ingenious mode of cross-swelling, operating both on choir and swell at the same time. The programme comprised Dr. Bridge's Sonata in D, Bach's Toccata in C, a Concertante by Handel, Mendelssohn's Overture to "Ruy Blas," and other works by various composers. Mr. M. Harding was the vocalist.

The Organ Recitals at the Bow and Bromley Institute have been resumed for the season. The opening Recital on Saturday, the 24th ult., was given by Mr. W. S. Hoyte; vocalist, Miss Hope Glenn, both of whom gave satisfaction to a crowded audience. The Recital on the 1st inst. will be given by the talented blind Organist, Mr. Alfred Hollins; on the 8th inst., by Mr. E. F. Turpin; and on the 15th inst., Dr. Spark will introduce to a London audience his new Cantata "Immanuel," and a new Duet for violin and organ by Sir G. A. Macfarren will be played for the first time by Dr. Spark and Mdlle. Gabrielle Valliant.

The Tufnell Park Choral Society (Mr. W. Henry Thomas, Conductor) will begin its rehearsals on the 11th inst. The works selected for practice will, as in former seasons, be chosen alternately from the standard Oratorios and from the most successful of the Cantatas produced at the autumn Festivals. Amongst those already selected are "The Red Cross Knight" (Prout), "Joan of Arc" (Gaul), "Last Judgment" (Spohr), "Ruth" (Cowen), "Elijah" (Mendelssohn), and "Olivet" (Bottesini).

Those who are interested in expiring copyrights may be glad to know that the opera "Maritana," having been first produced on November 15, 1845, its performing rights cease and determine after the 15th of next month, when the opera becomes common property. The two songs "In happy moments" and "Scenes that are brightest," are, however, not at present included in the lapsed properties, because it is said they were not in the first performance.

An Organ and Violin Recital was given at St. Nicholas', Cole Abbey, E.C., on August 30, by Mr. Henry J. Wood and Mr. Arthur Finch. The programme was an interesting one, including a new Prelude and Fugue (MS.), by Margaret Gyde; Adagio, for violin and organ, by G. Merkel; Prelude and Fugue, in A minor, by J. S. Bach; and a fine Fantaisie and Fugue, in G, by Krebs. The Recital was a great success, and was appreciated by a large congregation.

Mr. Woodhouse, the Organist of the Church, has been presented with a silver-mounted ebony bâton, subscribed for by the choirboys (past and present) of St. Saviour's, Pimlico, as well as a few boys who were under him at All Saints', Grosvenor Road. The bâton bore the following inscription: "Presented to Mr. D. Woodhouse by the Choirboys of St. Saviour's Church, Pimlico. July 16th, 1887."

We regret to say that Miss Hilda Coward is suffering from an affection of the chest, which will necessitate her giving up all her engagements and spending the winter in a milder climate. It is hoped that by this prompt treatment the danger which threatens her voice may be averted, and that she may be enabled to resume her professional duties in the summer.

Mr. H. W. Weston, F.C.O., of Balham, gave a Recital on the 6th ult., at St. Nicholas', Cole Abbey, E.C., when the programme included Rheinberger's 4th Sonata, a Fugue on the name "Bach" by Schumann, Raff's "Fest Marsch," and works by Merkel, Spohr and J. S. Bach. During the last month the organ has been completely overhauled and put in order.

At the Birkbeck Institution a Violin Recital was given by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse, on Wednesday evening, the 21st ult., when several interesting pieces by Mendelssohn, De Beriot, Sarasate, Vieuxtemps, Wieniawski, Papini, and Rode were performed, with considerable ability and expression. Miss Margaret Hoare and Mr. Edward Dalzell were the vocalists, and Mr. Alfred Izard the accompanist.

Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm ("As the hart pants") will be sung at St. Augustine and St. Faith's Church, Watling Street, E.C., on Thursday evening, the 13th inst., at the conclusion of Evensong, which commences at 7.30. The Service announced is Dr. Walmisley's setting in D major, and there will be two anthems in addition to the Psalm.

The Bach Choir will give three Concerts during the coming season, at which the principal works will be Palestrina's "Stabat Mater" (for the first time), Bach's Mass in B minor, and Purcell's "Dido and Æneas," the latter also for the first time by this Association.

On Sunday, the 16th inst., at the Church of All Saints', Norfolk Square, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" will be sung on the occasion of the Harvest Festival. Spohr's "Last Judgment" will also be rendered on October 30, on both occasions under the direction of Mr. Stedman.

Mr. Holland, bandmaster, has received a testimonial from the officers of the 48th Regiment, to "mark their approval of the high state of efficiency in which he left the band of the regiment." The band of the 48th Regiment have presented Mr. Holland with a "cuckoo clock."

Miss Minnie Hailstone (formerly a pupil of Mr. Henry Gadsby at the Guildhall School of Music), has received an appointment on the musical staff of the Mary Datchelor Girls' School, Camberwell.

Mr. J. Welsh Leith, late Organist and Choirmaster of Peebles Parish Church, has been presented with a purse of sovereigns and a handsomely illuminated address by some of the members of the congregation.

On the 16th ult., a handsome marble clock, with an illuminated address, was presented by the choir of Finsbury Park Congregational Church to Mr. A. J. Hawkins, their Organist, upon his return from his wedding trip.

Mr. W. G. Wood's new Magnificat and Nunc dimittis for voices, organ, and orchestra, will be performed at Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill, on Saturday, the 8th inst., under the direction of Dr. Walmisley Little.

A Tonic Sol-fa edition of Mr. F. H. Cowen's Oratorio "Ruth" is in preparation, and will be issued shortly.

On the 22nd ult., the John Thomas (Welsh) Scholarship (residue of two years) was competed for at the Royal Academy of Music. There were five candidates, and it was awarded to Llewela Segwedd Davies.

The third season of Monday Popular Ballad Concerts, under the direction of Miss Nellie Chaplin and Mr. Arthur Walenn, will commence, on the 3rd inst., at the Athenæum, Camden Road, N.

Mr. J. H. Bonawitz will give a cycle of six historical Organ, Harpsichord, and Pianoforte Recitals at the Portman Rooms, to commence on the 21st inst.

A Selection from Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be sung, with organ accompaniment, at St. Marylebone Parish Church, on Thursdays, October 13 and 20, at 8 p.m.

REVIEWS.

A Method of Singing. Written by Julius Stockhausen. Translated into English by Sophie Löwe. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

No words of ours should be necessary to recommend this book, coming as it does from an eminent musician who, both as vocalist and teacher, is well-known in England. It is dedicated by the author, in very touching language, to the memory of his gifted mother, in accompanying whom, on one occasion, Cramer fell upon his knees exclaiming: "These are sounds from above—sounds worthy of adoration." In the course of his introduction, Mr. Stockhausen declares the scope and purpose of his work: "It is not my intention to write a method of singing in the ordinary sense of the words. Many well-known ones exist already; but what I have attempted—and I beg that this work may be looked upon as an attempt only—is to explain and sometimes to illustrate by short examples, the simple laws of sound and their bearing upon the technique of singing. I shall show that the elements of speech themselves form the first exercises for the ear of a singer; that they explain the origin, attack, and quality of sound as well as the register; that the vowels themselves are the framers of beautiful tones; further, that it is only by the study of all the vowels—not, as many think, of one vowel alone—that a pure, beautiful, and expressive tone can be acquired; and, lastly, that a voice must be trained and rendered flexible in a moderate compass before attempting to develop the full power of which it is capable." The author adds: "As material for exercises, I have selected the six different kinds of vocalisation, and have endeavoured to show how the lungs, the larynx, and the articulating cavity work together, and how the technique in the art of singing depends on the proper treatment of these three parts of the vocal apparatus. If I succeed in clearing up these three points, the tenuto, portamento, legato, aspirato, staccato, and martellato—in short, the whole technique of singing will be brought under fixed laws." Of course, all this does not imply the taking up of absolutely new ground, but it is well to have a popular treatise from an authoritative source on a subject that, as a rule, manuals of singing deal with inadequately.

Space does not allow us to follow Mr. Stockhausen into a highly technical discussion explanatory of the theories laid down in the introduction. It may be said, however, that Madame Löwe's capital English translation makes his meaning very clear, and, in conjunction with copiou and interesting exercises, affords matter for very profitable study alike to amateur and professional, pupil and teacher. The remarks and examples connected with the six kinds of vocalisation mentioned above are specially valuable, and we feel sure that no singer, however accomplished, can study them without profit. In short, this book is a store of valuable hints, which everybody interested in the subject should make his own.

The Bach Choir Magazine. Select Vocal Part Music of various Schools. Edited by Otto Goldschmidt. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Though the Manual, which has proved so useful to the Bach Choir through the successive stages of its existence, contains but few compositions of modern date, nearly all the numbers appear in its pages for the first time in England; and of many of them no other English edition exists. This remark does not, of course, apply to the "Missa Papæ Marcelli"—complete, with the exception of the almost unknown Agnus Dei, No. 11. But neither here nor on the Continent has any other edition than this of Palestrina's masterpiece been printed in what is now generally accepted as the most useful popular form—viz., with the alto and tenor parts in the G clef, and well-considered indications of tempo and expression. The editor deserves great credit for the care and judgment bestowed upon his numerous annotations, and choral societies will find their adoption both convenient and effective.

Besides the "Missa Papæ Marcelli," the collection contains four shorter works by Palestrina, two of which—the Motetts "Assumpta est Maria" and "Hodie Christus natus est"—have never been elsewhere published in a separate form. Of the same school are some fine Motetts by Vittoria and Felice Anerio, and a masterly eight-part Magnificat by Giovanni Gabrieli, hitherto unknown to English students.

The works by members of the Bach family are five in number—viz., two settings of the Sanctus and a grand Double Chorus, by Johann Sebastian; a Choral, by Johann Michael; and a Motett by Johann Christoph, particularly interesting on account of the high estimation in which the productions of this composer were held by his illustrious kinsman.

An interesting example of the early German School is given in the form of a carol—"When to the Temple Mary went"—composed by Johannes Eccard, in 1598. Of like character, and nearly synchronous date, is the "Marien-Lied" by Michael Praetorius, an inspiration of charming simplicity, which derives additional interest from an effective setting of an English version of the same words by the Editor. Spohr's fine, but little known, "Twenty-third Psalm" is an equally happy specimen of the later German School of part-writing, which, notwithstanding its wide differences from the earlier style, may be traced back to it, through an uninterrupted series of changes, dating from the moment wherein strict counterpoint was first abandoned in favour of modern unprepared discords and chromatic progressions.

The English School of Sacred Music is represented by a Latin Psalm, "Jehova quam multi sunt," by Purcell. It is easy to trace, in this masterly composition, the form rendered familiar by the well-known Verse Anthems, in which the great English master stands unrivalled; and there are not many, even of these, that excel the present example, either in purity of style or dignity of treatment.

Eight numbers of the Magazine are devoted to national melody, beginning with "Pastime and good company," by King Henry VIII., in which a fourth part has been cleverly added to the original three by the Editor. Two Scottish airs have been harmonised, in a popular style, by A. H. D. Prendergast. But the interest of these examples centres in the German and Scandinavian melodies, which rank among the most noteworthy numbers in the collection. Brahms's enchanting Volkslied, "In stiller Nacht," is too well known to need further comment. The remaining melodies—one German and two Scandinavian—are arranged by the Editor; and the treatment of one of these, especially adapted from a song by Halfdan Kjerulf, is above all praise. The difficulty of the arranger's task is only equalled by that thrown upon the resources of the executants; but those who remember the delicate performance of "Tirili tove" by the Bach Choir can well appreciate the skill with which both forms of difficulty were not only overcome, but made to unite in producing an effect no less remarkable for its grace than for its novelty.

We would suggest that the following additions should be made in future numbers of the Magazine. In case of a reprint, we strongly recommend the repagination of the numbers containing the "Missa Papæ Marcelli," with a view to the presentation of its movements in their natural order; and, at the same time, the insertion of the above-mentioned Agnus Dei, No. 11. The reason of the omission of this from the editions published by the composer in 1567 is clear enough. The music submitted to the Commission of Cardinals was to be nothing if not simple; and this movement involves a double canon of extreme complexity. But it is not easy to understand why it should have been passed over in later reprints, and its insertion in a future number of the Bach Choir Magazine would be a great boon to the student, and place a complete copy of the Mass, for the first time, in the hands of the general public.

It remains only to say a few words on the excellence of the English translation, supplied, for the most part, by the Rev. Dr. Troutbeck, and in all cases faithfully representing both the spirit and the rhythm of the original Latin and German.

The Morning and Evening Service, set to Music in the Key of C. For Four Voices. Also set for Voices in Unison. By Harvey Löhr. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Modern composers of music for the service of the church have been accused, over and over again, of a careless disregard of the capabilities of the singers for whom they write, in order unduly to exalt the effects to be gained by the preference for the sound of the organ over vocal tone. Out of one evil grows another. If the voices may be disregarded with impunity, it comes to be a matter of small importance whether the spirit of the words selected for musical setting is brought out properly or entirely ignored. Those whose knowledge of modern church music is in any way extensive, can, with very little mental effort, recall several compositions which are in general use less in "choirs and places where they sing," than in galleries and lofts where they play the organ.

The organ has become a kind of Jeshurun among the congregations, and organists, in a general way, delight in having the command of a quantity of tone, and write, when they do write, with the desire to employ all possible advantages of this kind. Music is written for the voices as though they were instruments in competition with "the king of instruments," who, by pampering, has become almost a tyrant. The plan adopted by the composers of the past, of confining their musical thoughts intended to be expressed by voices within the limits of the five lines and four spaces of the stave proper to the second voices, has either been forgotten or is purposely ignored. Modern composers are unwise to follow this practice, inasmuch as they limit the acceptance of their written works. They laugh at such works as Jackson in F, but they do not succeed by their superior efforts in proving to the world that they are wiser than the despised composer. His music, poor as it is, retains its place in the affections of the many, because it is within the reach of their capacities. Music, to be popular, should be written with due regard to popular capacities. Very few cathedrals or church choirs are furnished with the needful number of Albanis, Pateys, Lloyds, or Santleys which seem to be ever present in the minds of some composers, and for whose exceptional powers their vocal passages seem to be written.

Not a few pieces written expressly for country choirs generally, show that the authors have a strong notion that the voice of the rural chorister is of extraordinary range and quality. They are astonished because the patronage of their genius is not equal to their expectations. Let them wonder no more, but let them change their style for one which may be certain of a good reception. Let them, in fact, take example of Mr. Harvey Löhr who, without stating his design, has done that in this thoroughly good setting of the Canticles employed in the Morning and Evening Services of the Anglican Church which will secure an extensive popularity.

There is not a note in any of the four-part writing, whether in the Te Deum, the Benedictus, with its alternative Jubilate Deo, the Kyrie, the Credo, the Sanctus, the Gloria in Excelsis, the Magnificat, and Nunc dimittis, which is not within the reach of voices of the most moderate range. There is no attempt to exalt the organ into a solo instrument, yet there is no neglect of opportunity for expressive effect alike in the voice parts or in the accompaniment. The setting is reverent, yet appropriate. The emphasis of the words is duly and attentively brought out, and whether in its unison or in its harmonised form it may be regarded as a wise departure from fashionable practices, and a sensible return to reasonable models.

Six vocal duets for Soprano and Contralto. Composed by Battison Haynes. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

It is difficult to say at first which of the two distinctive points, the voice parts or the pianoforte accompaniment, is worthy of the higher admiration. Each is bright and fascinating, and although they are, of course, designed to contribute to the general effect, yet there is so much talent and artistic fancy to be traced in each, that the reader unconsciously divides his appreciation according as the one or the other attracts his attention. Of course they should be considered as a whole, and whether as a set or as individual pieces, the six duets are each and all most ably constructed. The words, though graceful, could scarcely have had much to do towards inspiring the music, for the images have become somewhat worn in their transit from hand to hand. The music is charming and full of character suggested by the words. The first, "Sweet bells of eve," has an accompaniment of obvious character, yet as original as new harmonies can make the necessary repetitions of scale passages in imitation of the ringing of bells. In like manner "Gentle breezes," "'Tis golden June," "The silvery stream," "Spring flowers," and "The golden stars," have each exercised the ingenuity of our young composer. His work, besides being invested with particular musical interest, is also attractively melodious and will be much liked by singers and hearers wherever it is known.

Compositions by Josef Rheinberger. (Novello's Pianoforte Albums, Nos. 23, 24, 25.) [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Pianoforte students who delight in modern compositions for the instrument of their predilection have already made artistic acquaintance with the works of Josef Rheinberger. The present collection is one which should gladden the hearts of those who can appreciate the advantage of having a series of characteristic pieces in an agreeable and handy form. There are in the three books some twenty-five pieces, that is to say, in the first and third books (Nos. 23 and 25 in the series) there are seven in each, and eleven in the second book (No. 24). Some of the pieces have appeared in other forms, but the present publication is one of the most satisfactory as the legibility of the pages shows for itself. The additional value accruing from the careful revision of the editor, Mr. Berthold Tours, will not be overlooked in the assessment of the worth of the publication.

Morceaux de Salon. By Ippolito Ragghianti. (Novello, Ewer and Co.'s Albums for Violin and Pianoforte, No. 7.) [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

The name of the composer of these nine pieces is but little known in England. His work is distinguished by a special piquancy and strangeness which requires to be studied and understood, before a definite opinion can be formed concerning it. It cannot be compared with any of the works of the popular writers for the two instruments. It is, however, music which is worth cultivating, for it has the power of increasing its interest with increased acquaintance. Therefore, not only does this collection create attention for itself, but it excites a curiosity to know more of the author and of his labours.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The so-called "completion," by Herr Mahler of Leipzig, of Weber's unfinished opera "Die drei Pintos," to which we alluded in our last number, has been a leading topic in the German press, and has excited much general curiosity. At the same time a great deal of misconception appears to prevail, both as regards the condition in which Weber had left the work, and its subsequent history. The facts, briefly stated, are these: Weber began to conceive his musical themes for a comic opera dealing with a Spanish subject, and entitled "Die drei Pintos" (the libretto by his friend, Hofrath Winkler), immediately after the completion of his "Freischütz," and while yet engaged upon the music to "Preciosa." He continued his sketches to the "Pintos" until the end of the year 1821, after which, though he had by no means abandoned the work in his mind, no more at all events was written down. Moreover, the master's time was fully occupied subsequently with the composition of "Euryanthe" and "Oberon." The sketches to the "Pintos," found at his death, amounted to seven numbers, more or less clearly indicating the composer's intentions, but none of them instrumented. Little enough, indeed, for the purpose of performance, and yet representing some 1,700 bars of music emanating from Weber's most mature period. Efforts were made on behalf of the composer's widow to complete the work upon the basis of existing indications, and Meyerbeer, Weber's fellow-student, with the Abbé Vogler, was entrusted with the task. After most careful examination of the sketches, Meyerbeer declared himself unable to do as he was bid, pointing out the absolute impossibility to get at the composer's intentions in certain places, saying, "As in numerous other works of his, it is but one note that would solve the enigma; but this one was only known to him, and it was through it that he frequently produced the highest effects." Thus all hopes of welding the existing fragments into something which might be fairly called a posthumous opera by the composer of "Freischütz" were abandoned. Recently, however, the idea was revived by the grandson of the composer, who wrote a fresh libretto for the purpose (the one furnished by Winkler being considered a rather weak production), while retaining the outlines of the original plot, and his friend, Herr Mahler, set to work enthusiastically to accomplish that which Meyerbeer had, somewhat diplomatically no doubt, declared to be impossible. Herr Ludwig Hartmann, the able Dresden critic, who has lately heard some of the resuscitated music referred to, writes in the Dresdener Tagblatt, inter alia, as follows:—"The young capellmeister Mahler has here identified himself more completely and absolutely with the composer than ever Meyerbeer could have possibly done. The entire work is really Weber's music, some of it being borrowed from his long-forgotten earlier works, and all compiled in the most ingenious way and with an assiduity truly surprising. The score, however, is not, as yet, quite completed. . . . The musical public will be delighted with the charming, sparkling, truly Weberian melodies here contained; and in any case, so much has actually been done of the work by Weber's own hand, that no fears need be entertained that the result of the reconstruction of the opera could be at all detrimental to the master's memory." "Die drei Pintos" will be produced in a few months at the Leipzig Stadt-Theater, and it will then be shown how far Herr Hartmann's sanguine anticipations have been justified.

The Neue Musik Zeitung, of Cologne, publishes (in its No. 18) a series of letters written by Richard Wagner to Frau Henrietta Kriete-Wüst, for many years a favourite prima donna at the Dresden Opera, and as such one of the earliest interpreters of the parts of Irene and Adriano in "Rienzi," Venus in "Tannhäuser," and Elsa in "Lohengrin." The letters are dated from the period of Wagner's capellmeistership at Dresden, and are interesting examples both of the master's playful humour and of his otherwise well-known proficiency in the art of coaxing, as a means of obtaining his artistic ends. Thus he writes from Teplitz, under date July 25, 1843:—"Dear Fräulein Jette,—If you will not consent to sing Adriano, neither will I bring you anything from here. But if you will sing it, not only shall you get the music of the part sent to your house with all speed, but likewise a charming wedding present, which I shall carry along with me. Do have pity on me! . . . ." Henrietta Wüst was subsequently married to Herr J. Kriete, an able actor and dramatic author, at Dresden, and among the most treasured recollections of that lady (now in her seventy-sixth year) is the masterly humorous oration delivered by the poet-composer at her wedding banquet. Wagner retained a warm friendship for the Kriete family throughout his life.

Peter Cornelius's masterly comic opera "Der Barbier von Bagdad," already firmly established in the répertoires of the opera houses of Munich and Hamburg, is now in course of being mounted also at Dresden, Cologne, Cassel, and Prague. Cornelius, who also wrote two serious operas, was an adherent to the so-called New German school of music. He was an intimate friend of Liszt, under whose auspices "Der Barbier von Bagdad" was first produced at Weimar, in 1858, where it was very coldly received by the public. This fact greatly disgusted Liszt, and is said to have contributed not a little to his finally quitting his post of Conductor at the Weimar Hof-Theater. The generous-minded pianist-composer had, however, the satisfaction of finding the accuracy of his judgment confirmed in the subsequent enthusiastic reception of his friend's chef-d'œuvre at Munich. Not so the genial composer himself, who died some years previous to that event, in 1874, having scarcely attained his fiftieth year.

An opera "Der Sturm," an operatic version of Shakespeare's "The Tempest," the libretto by Herr J. V. Widmann, is to be the first novelty to be brought out this season at the Hof-Theater of Hanover. The talented composer, Herr Ernst Frank, the successor of Dr. von Bülow in the Conductor's chair at the Hanover Opera, has been afflicted lately with mental disease, from the effects of which he has not yet recovered. Herr Frank, while Conductor at the Mannheim Stadt-Theater, was the first to bring out Goetz's charming opera "The Taming of the Shrew," and he is moreover the translator into German of the libretti to Mr. Villiers Stanford's "The veiled Prophet" and "Savonarola."

Herr Hans von Bronsart, the new General-Intendant of the Weimar Hof-Theater, inaugurated his régime at that institution with a performance, on the 3rd ult., of Gluck's "Iphigenia in Tauris." In a subsequent address to the artists of the establishment, Herr von Bronsart solicited the hearty co-operation of his listeners with his own efforts, which would be directed towards the encouragement of true art only, no matter whence it emanated, and without regard to his personal predilections. Herr von Bronsart is a disciple of the Wagner-Liszt school, and is likely to revive the traditions of the activity of the latter when he was Conductor at the same theatre.

The Berlin Opera resumed its performances after the usual recess, on the 1st ult., with a gala-performance of Verdi's "Aïda." Later in the month, Mdlle. Nordica made a most successful début in "La Traviata" and "Faust." At the end of the Garden scene in M. Gounod's opera, the orchestra played a fanfare in her honour, and during the evening she was called eleven times before the curtain.

Dr. Hans von Bülow will be the Conductor of the entire series of Philharmonic Concerts at Berlin during next winter.

The St. Matthew Passion Music, by Heinrich Schütz, has just been published for the first time in its entirety by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig. This interesting work, which foreshadows to a surprising extent the similar treatment of the same subject by Bach, is edited by Herr A. Mendelssohn, who has added an organ accompaniment to the score.

Herr Carl Bechstein, the well-known pianoforte manufacturer of Berlin, acting upon a suggestion made to him by Dr. von Bülow, has just patented an ingenious contrivance combining a conductor's desk with a small pianoforte. The conductor is thereby enabled to accompany the secco recitatives in operatic performances himself, without leaving his seat, and to support the singers on the stage whenever he has occasion to do so.

Herr Pollini, the well known impresario of Hamburg, has, it is said, discovered another phenomenal tenor who tops the famous ut de poitrine of the ex-coachman Bötel by three semitones. The fortunate possessor of these charms is, or was, until recently, a Galician peasant, and, after having undergone a course of training will, it is needless to add, make his first appearance in opera at the Hamburg Stadt-Theater.

The first performance of M. Massenet's "Le Cid," at the Vienna Hof-Theater, is to take place on the 14th inst., with Madame Pauline Lucca and Herr Winkelmann as representatives of the leading parts.

The performances of the Paris Opéra Comique Company are about to be resumed on the stage of the Théâtre de Paris, which has been renovated and adapted for the purpose.

M. Camille Saint-Saëns is engaged upon a new opera "Benevenuto Cellini," the subject also of an operatic work by his great compatriot, Hector Berlioz, which, though recently revived with some success in Germany, has never been popular in the composer's native country.

At the Paris Grand Opéra preparations on a large scale have been on foot for some time past to celebrate the five hundredth performance here of M. Gounod's "Faust." The opera was originally brought out on March 19, 1859, at the Théâtre Lyrique, with Madame Carvalho in the part of the heroine, and though at first creating but little enthusiasm, it was destined to become the most successful lyric work of the period. When subsequently "Faust" was being mounted also at the French national Opera House, the composer added the necessary ballet music to his work, without which no operatic performance is permitted at that establishment. M. Gounod's chef-d'œuvre, it may be added, is now the only opera of "Faust" on the operatic répertoire of any country, notwithstanding the numerous lyric works (including one by L. Spohr) bearing the same title, and constructed more or less upon the lines of Goethe's drama, which have been brought out during the present century. The forthcoming five hundredth performance will be conducted by the veteran French composer himself, and the occasion will, no doubt, be a memorable one.

Mdlle. Leisinger, the Berlin prima donna, recently engaged in the same capacity by the directors of the Grand Opéra, made her début on that stage last month in the rôle of Marguerite in "Faust." The lady was, however, very coldly received, partly, no doubt, on account of her nationality, and was somewhat severely handled moreover by a portion of the Paris press. In these circumstances the artist, rather than face the trial to her nerves which probably awaited her at a second appearance, has cancelled her contract with the directors, and has returned to Berlin.

A posthumous operatic work from the pen of Félicien David, entitled "Le bon Fermier de Fraconville," is to be produced at Paris this season. The manuscript score had a narrow escape of being lost in the recent conflagration at the Opéra Comique.

The new theatre to be opened this month at Brussels has iron balconies built out in connection with each internal gallery, all of them connected by ladders, and these balconies moreover will hold more people than the whole house will hold. The Brussels playgoer will thus enjoy something like practical security from fire.

At the international contest of male Choral Societies, recently held at Liège, the "Harmonia" of Aix-la-Chapelle was awarded the first, and the "Apollo" Society of Bonn the second prize for general proficiency.

Rumours are again afloat to the effect that Verdi is just now engaged upon a new opera—"Romeo e Julietta"—for which Signor Boïto, his able coadjutor in "Otello," is said to have furnished the libretto. As in the case of the latter work, the best informed friends of the veteran Maëstro are supposed to be pledged in maintaining the most profound secrecy as to the progress of the new opera. May the anticipations raised in the musical world by this new rumour be gratified equally with those preceding the long delayed first production of "Otello."

The National Library at Rome has, we are informed by Il Mondo Artistico, just acquired a most interesting collection of autographs by eminent musicians, including a number of letters written by Rossini, Donizetti, Mercadante, Verdi, Meyerbeer, Paganini, Lablache, Ronconi, Malibran, Frezzolini, and others.

An opera, written by a young Italian, as yet unknown to fame, is to be produced on no less than sixteen Italian stages during the coming winter, as also at the New York Opera. The father of the young Maëstro is a millionaire, Signor Franchetti, who has hired the theatres for the above purpose.

The newly-founded Wagner Society of New York, with an orchestra of one hundred performers, will give during this winter a series of Concerts with works by Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, and, of course, Wagner. A similarly styled Society is being formed also at Boston (Mass.).

A new popular edition of the complete literary works of Richard Wagner (comprising ten volumes) is about to be issued in numbers, at the price of sevenpence each, by the firm of E. W. Fritzsch, of Leipzig.

The death is announced, at Berlin, at the age of seventy-five, of Musik-Director Franz Commer, a composer of cantatas and other choral works, and the editor of a series of valuable compositions by old masters of church music, chiefly of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

We have also to record the death, on August 30, at Homberg, near Cassel, of Dr. Wilhelm Volckmar, one of the most remarkable organ virtuosos of our time, and highly esteemed as a composer of sonatas and other pieces for his instrument. He was also the author of an Organ School, a standard work of its kind, which obtained a wide circulation. Volckmar was born at Hersfeld, in 1812, and in 1835 was appointed to a professorship at a government training college in Homberg, which post he occupied up to the time of his death.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MARTINI'S "ESEMPLARE."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—I have been so interested in the above work (a copy of which a short time ago came into my hands) that I would gladly see put into practice the suggestion made by the writer of an article on the book (under the heading of "Saggio di Contrappunto," in Grove's Dictionary), that there should be a careful reprint of the same; surely a small committee of leading musicians might take the matter up, and (after ascertaining the probable cost of each copy) canvass—through the musical periodicals, or otherwise—for subscribers' names, until a sufficient number were obtained to start the thing. The new edition might take the form of a translation, or be kept in the original Italian, this last (from the nature of the work) being easily understood with some little help from a dictionary.

In the meantime I thought that a slight description of the "Esemplare" might not be uninteresting to some of your readers, who though, perhaps, unacquainted (from its extreme scarcity) with the book itself, are yet familiar with the many allusions to it and quotations from it, met with in such standard text-books as those of Cherubini, Ouseley, Banister, &c.

The full title of the first volume is "Esemplare ossia Saggio Fondamentale Practico di Contrappunto sopra il Canto Fermo," the second volume having the same, excepting that the word "Fugato" takes the place of "sopra il Canto Fermo." The first volume contains examples of old church music, composed on ancient canto fermo, and is divided according to the "tones"—so many compositions on Melodies of the "first tone," so many on Melodies of the "second tone," and so on. These examples are taken from the works of the following composers: Animuccia, Cifra, Corvo, Falconio, Gabusso, Minarti, Morales, N. N., Navarro, Nitramo, Olstani, Ortiz, Palestrina, Pasquale, Pontio, Porta, Rota, Willaert, Vittoria, and Zarlino (Martini himself adding some canons, &c., in illustration of different points cropping up in the course of his discourse). Each composition is fully analysed, and its contrapuntal artifices and chief beauties noticed, the peculiar characteristics induced by the particular "tone" to which its canto fermo belongs (such as cadences, &c.) being clearly pointed out.

The second volume contains samples of fugal composition in styles varying from free imitation to strict canon, and in scores of from two to eight voices, by the following composers: Agostini, Barberieri, Baroni, Bernabei, Caresana, Clari, Foggia, Gesualelo (Principe di Venosa), Lotti, Marcello, Marenzio, Monteverde, N. N., Pacchioni, Palestrina, Perti, Piochi, Porta, Predieri, Riccieri, A. Scarlatti, Stradella, Steffani, and Turini (Martini, as in the first volume, furnishing various musical illustrations to his commentary).

In the style of free imitation the Madrigals by Palestrina, Marenzio, Monteverde, &c., form a most interesting series—very instructive as showing the peculiar characteristics of this class in contradistinction to those of the old church music forming the rest of the collection in this second volume. All these examples are (like those of the first volume) accompanied by a most enjoyable running commentary; in fact, the "Esemplare" is like a gallery of old masterpieces, which we view in company with a genial and clever critic—a critic, moreover, who has a loving reverence for the works of art on which he discourses. Here (in Martini's notice of an extract from Palestrina's "Ave Maria") is an interesting little passage on "real" answers, "which are not much admired by many moderns, who for the most part admit only tonal fugue; the old writers, on the contrary, were persuaded that real fugue was more valuable and convenient to the composer, and practised this more than the other." And again, at page 81: "It should be observed that, for the most part, the first masters of the art answered a subject at the fourth rather than at the fifth, to avoid accidental sharps and flats."

Martini places the mere mechanically clever forms of composition on their proper level, saying of them (in his discourse on a canon in contrary motion, by Zarlino)—"These artifices, these laborious engagements, easily appear to composers of our times as useless fatigue, that very quickly corrupts the good taste which is the natural and intrinsic quality of our music; but I think that such an exercise, practised with moderation by those who desire to attain to perfection in the profession, may afford great light and help towards mastering the most essential rules of counterpoint."

The following sentence on the value to the student of a canto fermo as a basis for his exercise is terse and to the point:—"By practising upon this he has a guide for mastering most easily and quickly the art of composing well; whereas he must, on the contrary, without this guide, proceed uncertainly and blindly to form the melody of the parts (especially the bass) and to join them in a disorderly and displeasing counterpoint."

Martini had a high appreciation of the old church melodies as powerful aids to religious feeling. In his notice of a hymn for the "Vesper of all the Martyrs," by Palestrina, he says—speaking of the canto fermo on which it is composed—"This canto, above many others, produces in thoughtful hearers a feeling of gladness and innocent delight, which moves their spirits to praise God with greater fervour, and to exult in the distant glory which the sainted martyrs enjoy in heaven."

In the masterly essay on fugue, forming the first part of the second volume, Martini places fugal themes in a threefold classification (which I have never seen in any other treatise)—viz., into that of—and gives a clear description of each kind, in addition to the above musical illustrations.

In conclusion, I trust that the suggestion before alluded to may before long be put into practice, and that my professional brethren may enjoy the great intellectual treat which a careful perusal of Martini's "Esemplare" affords.

I am, dear Sir, yours truly.

ORIGIN OF A MUSICAL PHRASE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—May I be permitted to state that the song which contains the phrase—was composed by Auguste de Weyrauch (Sivonia), 1820, and not by Schubert.—Yours, &c.,

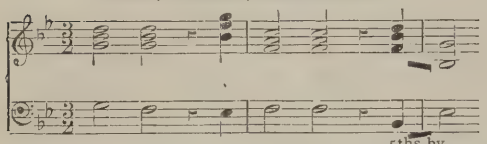
CONSECUTIVE FIFTHS AND EIGHTHS IN THE WORKS OF THE GREAT MASTERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

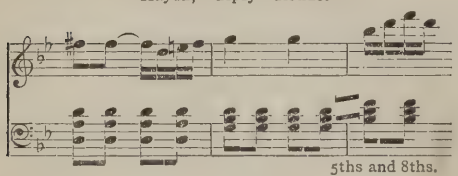
Sir,—May I ask you to kindly insert the following in The Musical Times if you consider the subject in question of any interest:—

Handel, "Messiah." Pastoral Symphony.

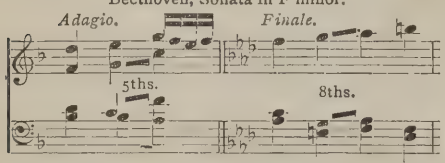
Handel, Sarabande, Seventh Suite.



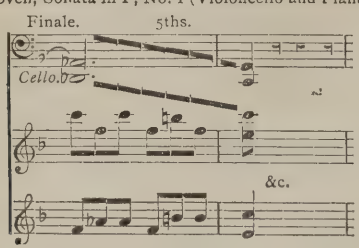
Haydn, "Gipsy" Rondo.



Beethoven, Sonata in F minor.



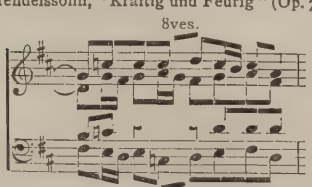
Beethoven, Sonata in F, No. 1 (Violoncello and Pianoforte).



Mendelssohn, Sonata in B flat (Violoncello and Pianoforte).

1st movement Pianoforte part only.

Mendelssohn, "Kräftig und Feurig" (Op. 7).

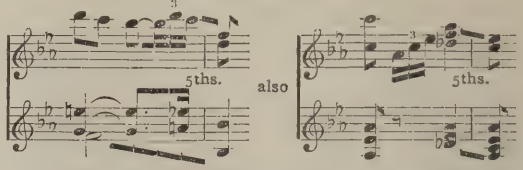


This is a remarkable passage to find in the writings of one whose keen eye could discover an eliminated bar in Bach's E minor Organ Fugue, after it had been printed for years in the incorrect form—

Schubert, C major Sonata, Second movement.

In the pianoforte arrangement of Schumann's Symphonies several curious passages occur, e.g.—

Second Symphony, Adagio.



I have not the full score of the last quotation by me, and it is possible that the passages would present quite a different aspect in the original form. The above passages are not pointed out in any carping spirit, but in the hope that they may prove of some little interest to my fellow readers; for we can well excuse even graver faults in works of such surpassing beauty as those from which the extracts are taken. Examples might be multiplied; but I fear that I have already trespassed upon your valuable space, and on the forbearance of the readers.

I am, yours faithfully,

D. Colley.

[The fifths in the quotation from the "Pastoral Symphony" are not Handel's, but are due to a perpetuated printer's error. The passage in the original MS. in Buckingham Palace stands thus—

The passage is thus of consecutive sevenths, not fifths.—Ed. M. T.]

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—Allow me to correct a misprint which occurs in my letter in this month's issue of The Musical Times. The fourth sentence should be—"If 'Cello' cares for 'old masters,' I can recommend 'Violin and Cello Duos' of Albrechtsberger."—I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

R. H. Legge.

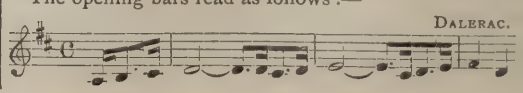
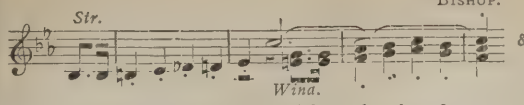
OVERTURES BY DALERAC AND BISHOP.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—Can any of your readers inform me as to the source (operatic, I presume) and correct title of the following overtures; also where can be obtained a reliable full score or pianoforte arrangement of the same? The overtures in question are taken from a volume in MS. full score, now in my possession, and were copied or arranged by W. Roger Lyne, who—judging from a note on the title-page of one of the overtures—appears to have been a conductor or leader at the Haymarket Theatre from about 1830 to 1836.

The opening bars read as follows:—





No. 1 is said to be "arranged from the pianoforte score." Dalerac is, I imagine, another spelling of Dalayrac, the eminent French operatic composer of 1753—1809.

Yours very truly,

Orlando A. Mansfield.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Ashton-under-Lyne.—The annual Harvest Festival Services were held at Christ Church, on the 18th ult. In the afternoon, Farmer's Oratorio Christ and His Soldiers, was performed. The work had previously been given by the choir, consequently there was considerable smoothness throughout. The principals were Miss Marjorie Eaton; Messrs. Field, Robson, Percival, and Green. The accompaniments were played by Mr. R. Thornhill, and Mr. Smith conducted.

Binghamton, N.Y.—At the Congregational Church, Professor S. Lasar, from Brooklyn, N.Y., gave, at the solicitation of the citizens of Binghamton, a free Organ Recital of popular music, on July 21, at eight o'clock. His programme was selected from the works of Wagner, Beethoven, Schubert, Meyerbeer, and Handel. Miss Edith Weld varied the selection by singing some songs by Haydn and Gounod.

Bridgwater.—The annual Harvest Thanksgiving Service at Holy Trinity Church took place on the 15th ult. As in former years the decorations were on an elaborate scale, and they were also very tasteful and effective, and greatly admired. The musical portion of the service reflected great credit alike on Mr. Gosden, the Organist and Choirmaster, and the members of the choir, thirty in number. The choir has hitherto been dependent, on these occasions, upon some assistance from without. Extraneous aid this year, however, was dispensed with, and the manner in which the service was rendered throughout proved the ability of the choir to accomplish satisfactorily and efficiently the task assigned them.

Burnt Ash.—The United Choirs of the Congregational Churches connected with the Loop Line Association, held a Service of Praise at Burnt Ash Congregational Church, on Wednesday evening, the 15th ult., at which Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," Spohr's "How lovely," and other anthems were very creditably rendered. Mr. Sydney Cozens conducted, and Mr. Francis Adams presided at the organ.

Demerara.—The Musical Society's Concert on the 19th ult. was of more than usual artistic interest. A prominent feature was the principal part of "A Jubilee Ode," which was written by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie for the recent Festival Concert at the Crystal Palace. Thanks to the courtesy of a kindred society in Trinidad, by whom the entire work was performed at the celebration of the Jubilee in that island, the Demerara Musical Society was in possession of the full score for soli, chorus, and orchestra, but time only permitted of the production of the leading features. These, however, proved a rare treat.

Denbigh.—An Organ Recital was given on Wednesday, August 24, by Dr. Spark, at St. Mary's Church, to the great delight of a large audience. The programme was as follows: Concerto in G minor and major (with Cadenza composed by Dr. Spark for Leeds Musical Festival), Handel; Largo Appassionata, from the Sonata in A, Beethoven; Organ Sonata (dedicated to Dr. Hopkins) (Allegro Moderato, Andante Expressivo, Allegro Vivace), Spark; "Angelic Voices" (Larghetto in E flat, Andante in A flat), Batiste: Melodie Religieuse, "Ave Maria," Schubert; Fantasia Pastorale (Storm), Wély; Largo in D, from Symphony, No. 8, Haydn; full chorus from a Mass, Haydn.

Douglas.—Amongst other attractions in the Isle of Man during the last visiting season have been the popular Organ Recitals by Miss Mundey, in Finch Hill Church, Douglas. This young lady gave the last of these performances on the 20th ult. The church was packed with an appreciative audience. The programme consisted of selections from the compositions of Batiste, Wély, Bach, and Dr. Frost. The vocalists were Miss Dews and Mr. Kendal Thompson, who sang selections from the works of Handel, Mendelssohn, and others.

Durban.—A series of interesting festivities were held on July 21, at Durban, in honour of the Queen's Jubilee. The mayor gave a banquet and a reception, a children's party was held, and a Concert was given in the Town Hall, at which a crowded gathering was assembled. The Concert was given by the members of the Durban Philharmonic Society, under Mr. D. MacColl's able conductorship, assisted by the band of the First Royal Enniskillen Fusiliers, conducted by Bandmaster Wallace. An excellent selection of music, both vocal and instrumental, gave much pleasure to the very large audience.

Enniskillen.—Mr. Arnold's eleventh Concert was given in the Town Hall, on the 14th ult., before a fashionable and crowded audience. Schubert's Sonata for piano and violin (Op. 137), Chopin's Polonaise in C minor, and Weber's Rondo from Pianoforte Sonata, familiarly known as the "Perpetuum Mobile," were among the pieces given. Mr. Arnold's choir sang several pieces with considerable effect. Solos and duets were sung by Mrs. Capt. Charles D'Arcy Irvine, Mrs. H. Irvine, Miss McKeague, Major Irvine, Messrs. Trimble, Murray, Benson, and Gunning. The band of the Bedfordshire Regiment, under the direction of Mr. Pocock, bandmaster, performed at intervals. Mr. Matthew Arnold conducted.

Epping.—The Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held in the Church of St. John the Baptist on the 21st ult. The Service was fully choral, the Creed and Lord's Prayer being sung to a setting by Dr. Pearce. The Anthem was "Fear not, O land" (Caleb Simper). Miss Elsa Odell, the Organist of the Church, accompanied the Service, and played pieces by Mendelssohn, Wély, and Handel.

Falmouth.—On the 8th ult., a Concert was given in connection with the annual Exhibition of the Royal Cornwall Polytechnic Society. The performers were Miss F. Banks, Miss B. Hallamore, Miss Waymark, Miss Lucy Waymark, Miss Adela Duckham (violinist), Rev. J. H. Collins, Mr. G. H. Robinson, and Mr. C. W. Robinson. Miss Adela Duckham was very enthusiastically received, and her violin solos encored. At the close of the programme the President announced that the Committee had decided on awarding to Miss Adela Duckham the Society's first silver medal.

Gibraltar.—A highly successful Concert was given at the Assembly Rooms, Gibraltar, on the evening of August 10, under the patronage of His Excellency the Hon. Sir A. E. Hardinge and H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh. The Concert was arranged by the Rev. P. Raymond, Chaplain to the Forces, and Captain Wyon, O.S. Dept., and was in aid of the funds for a New Organ for King's Garrison Chapel, Gibraltar, which has been built in London by Messrs. Bevington, Soho, and is now ready for shipment. Señor A. Rey Colaço, who has studied at Berlin for the past seven years, gave a masterly rendering of Chopin's Spianato and Polonaise in E flat. The accompaniments to nearly all the songs were played by Signor Laboccetta, who for many years past in Gibraltar has had the reputation of being the ablest resident pianist here, and who has composed a Jubilee Part-song, which was sung before the Duke of Edinburgh at this Concert. The debt on the organ has, by the Concert, been reduced from £70 to £50, which is most satisfactory, considering that the organ has not yet left the builder's hands.——Signor Holgado is a native of Gibraltar who, for several years, has been studying the art of singing in Italy. He possesses a powerful tenor voice, and recently gave a Concert at the Theatre on behalf of the poor of all creeds, which was well attended. He has been invited to sing at Malaga at the great fête to be held there, commencing August 21.——The bands of the Royal West Kent Regiment, the 3rd Battalion King's Royal Rifles, and the Royal Irish Rifles have proceeded to Malaga per H.M.S. Hecla, to take part in the great band competition to be held in the Bull Ring at Malaga.——The string bands of H.M.S. Alexandra and Dreadnought played in the Alameda Gardens, on August 19, from 8.30 to 11.0 p.m. H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh was present among the immense crowd of listeners, and a large number of Naval and Military Officers. About forty-five instruments, including three double basses, under the able direction of the bandmaster of the flag-ship Alexandra, produced a good effect.——On August 17, Señor Rey Colaço gave an excellent Pianoforte Recital here, assisted by Signor Laboccetta. As an Instrumental Concert, it was the best of its kind that has taken place in Gibraltar for a long time past.

Hallingford.—The Harvest Festival was held at St. Mary's Church on Thursday, the 15th ult. There was a Celebration of Holy Communion at eight, Matins was said at eleven, and Evensong at eight was choral, the sermon being preached by the Rev. G. B. Brown, Vicar of Chalgrove, Oxon. The choir was augmented by the assistance of members of St. Leonard's choir. There was Processional and Recessional Hymns; the Festal Responses of Tallis and the Harmonised Confession were used; the proper Psalms and Canticles were sung to Anglican Chants; and the Anthem "O taste and see" (Goss) was very well rendered, the first part by a reduced choir and the remainder full. Mr. F. A. Clarke, Organist and Choirmaster of the Church, directed the music and presided at the organ, and, at the close of the service, played Wély's Offertoire in G.

Haynes, near Bedford.—The annual Harvest Festival in connection with this church was celebrated on Wednesday evening, the 21st ult. The Communion table was adorned with the beautiful gold altar cloth which was presented by the Queen to the late Lord John Thynne on the occasion of her Majesty's Coronation. The service was full choral. The proper Psalms were sung to Anglican Chants. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were by Dr. Stainer, and the Anthem, "Awake up, my glory," was by Mr. James Loaring. Service was intoned by the Rev. A. E. D. Osborne, vicar. The Rev. R. C. Whitworth preached the sermon. The musical portion of the service was repeated on the following Sunday, and the singing throughout was most praiseworthy.

Hednesford.—On Sunday, the 18th ult., the annual Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held in the Parish Church. At the Morning Service, the Prince Consort's Te Deum was sung, and in the evening, Dr. Martin's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis; the Anthem being "Praise the Lord, O my soul," by Caleb Simper. The whole of the music was well rendered by the choir, under the conductorship of Mr. G. Neale, Choirmaster; the Organist, Mr. E. Lindop, presiding at the organ.

Herne Bay.—A Harvest Festival Service was held in the Parish Church, on Thursday, the 8th ult. The sacred edifice was profusely decorated with corn, fruits, and flowers. The service was for the most part choral, and included a new anthem, the work of Miss Helen J. H. Sumner, of Ellesborough Rectory, Bucks.

Kirton Lindsey.—On Wednesday the 6th ult., a highly interesting Concert of vocal and instrumental music was given in the Long Room, at the Vicarage. The performers were Miss Charters, Miss Howlett, Mr. Charters, and Mr. Woodhouse. The vocal part of the programme devolved entirely on Miss C. H. Charters, who, by her rendering of "Should he upbraid," gave great satisfaction. Schubert's Impromptu (Op. 142) was interpreted in a masterly style by Mr. A. A. Woodhouse, who is a player of exceptional merit. An original Violin Sonata, from the pen of Miss C. H. Charters (Organist of All Saints' Church, Edinburgh) was played by Mr. A. R. Charters.

Leeds Corporation Free Concerts.—Dr. Spark's Recital on the grand organ, in the Town Hall, attracted the usual crowd on the evening of the 17th ult. The special item in the excellent programme was a selection from Gounod's Oratorio Redemption, a work of surpassing beauty of melody and harmony. The manner in which the organist interpreted the various numbers was duly appreciated. Especially beautiful was his rendering of the Leitmotive and the "March to Calvary." The other composers drawn upon were Bach, Handel, Haydn, Wély, and Lemmens.

Newport, R.I.—Mr. Jerome Hopkins gave a Morning Pianoforte Recital and Children's Operatic Festival, at the Casino Theatre, on Saturday, the 10th ult. The Pianoforte Recital included such astonishing works as a "Kangaroo Study," a Transcription of the melody, "Oft in the Stilly Night"; "Pearl Drops" (Trill study), and a Rossini melody, arranged for left-hand alone. All composed and performed by Mr. Jerome Hopkins. In part two, some selections from his Children's Opera of Taffy and Old Munch were presented.

North Cadbury.—A series of four Concerts of unusual excellence was given on the 7th and 8th ult., by Mr. Wentworth Bennett. The numerous pieces allotted to the orchestra were rendered with purity of tone and due attention to light and shade. Some original compositions from the pen of Mr. Wentworth Bennett—namely, a Symphony in C major, a Concerto in E minor, for flute and orchestra; a Rustic Idyll, Overture to King Arthur, and a Jubilee March, deserve wide recognition. Madame Wilson-Osman, Mr. William Nicholl, Madame Isabel Fassett, Mr. W. W. Alcock, and Mr. Goldsmith were the vocalists.

Plymouth.—At the Organ Recital at the Guildhall, on the 10th ult., the artists were Mr. Hele (organist), Miss Adela Duckham (violinist), and Mr. Clemence (pianist).

Rochford, Essex.—A Harvest Festival was held on Sunday, the 18th ult. At the Morning Service, Smart's Te Deum in F was given, and at the Evening Service the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to a setting by W. T. Best. The Anthem was "O Lord, how manifold" (Barnby), and the whole of the music was rendered in a satisfactory manner. The congregation joined in singing the hymns with especial heartiness. Mr. Ernest N. Cullum, the Organist and Choirmaster of the Church, accompanied throughout the day.

Ryde, I.W.—The Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held at St. John's Church on Thursday, the 15th ult. The Anthem, "He shall dwell in the land," by Dr. Stainer, the bass solo being sung by Mr. Hodgson; the Te Deum by Boyce, and the Magnificat by Bunnett, were effectively rendered. Mr H. Bailey, the Organist of the Church, presided at the organ.——On Tuesday evening, the 20th ult., a Concert was given in aid of the sufferers from the terrible fire at Exeter. The Concert was most successful, about £25 being gained for the object for which it was given.

Salisbury.—A Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held in St. Thomas's Church, on the 15th ult. In addition to the organ, a full surpliced orchestra, stationed in the chancel, accompanied the service, the choir being considerably augmented for the occasion. The Service was Stainer in B flat, the Anthem, "He shall feed my flock" (Simper), and the Voluntary before the Anthem, the Andante from the Italian Symphony (Mendelssohn). The Organist (Mr. A. A. Aylward) conducted, and Mr. W. T. Bowey (a pupil) presided at the organ. There was an immense congregation. Canon Stephenson, of St. John's, Weymouth, preached the sermon.

Southsea.—At the Pavilion, Mr. H. Austin Storry gave his annual Concert, which was extensively patronised. The artists were Miss Philippine Siedle, Miss M. Elliott, Messrs. Orlando Harley, G. May, H. Stubbs, C. Beckett, D. Sutton Shepley, Signor Abramoff, and the London Male Voice Quartet. Pianoforte, Messrs. G. S. L. Lohr, G. D. Lovegrove, and H. Austin Storry; and the band of the South Lancashire Regiment.

RUTH
A PASTORAL CANTATA
Words by Edward Oxenford
MUSIC BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"'Ruth' is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunefulness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"'Ruth' has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

MUSICAL BIOGRAPHY

JOSEPH BENNETT.

PROSPECTUS.

Some years have passed since Mr. Joseph Bennett began, in The Musical Times, a series of biographical notices which are still far from ended. The original purpose was a limited one—namely, to throw light upon the personality of famous musicians by means of extracts selected and arranged from their letters and other writings. Hence the series had for first title "The Great Composers, sketched by themselves."

Consequent upon the remarkable favour with which the notices were received, it was determined to extend their scope, and, while making prominent the Masters' own testimony, to deal with each subject in a complete biographical form, as far as allowed by the limits necessarily imposed. The words "sketched by themselves" were therefore dropped from the title.

It was further resolved to make additions in the case of the composers dealt with under the original idea, and to issue the notices separately as "Primers of Musical Biography."

The intention of "Novello's Primers of Musical Biography" is to convey, as clearly as the limits of an elementary work will allow, a just idea of each composer's personality, and to record the principal events of his life. Knowledge of what a man is helps the understanding of what he does. These little books may serve, therefore, as a first step towards acquaintance with the genius and compositions of the masters to whom they are devoted.

For the copious extracts made from letters, &c., throughout the series, no apology is offered. They are the best material upon which to base an estimate of character.

CAPTIVES OF BABYLON

AN ORATORIO COMPOSED BY

GEO. SHINN, MUS. BAC., CANTAB.

The work is suitable for Concert Room or Church. Price 2s. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the author of several Cantatas and other compositions, all of which are written in a style at once musicianly and popular. 'The Captives of Babylon' may be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas. The work contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety. Choral Societies, which desire an interesting and moderately easy work to perform, will do well to select this Oratorio. It will well repay the time spent in its preparation, and will be sure to 'take.'"—Sunday School Chronicle.

"The music is appropriate, interesting, melodious, and but of moderate difficulty. The work is one of Mr. Shinn's best efforts, and we all know that Mr. Shinn has written some charming music. We heartily recommend this Oratorio to Choral Societies."—Essex County Chronicle.

"'The Captives of Babylon' will be found a welcome addition to the répertoires of Choral Societies and Church Choirs."—The Musical World.

THE HOLY CITY

A SACRED CANTATA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"To show the great popularity of Mr. Gaul's Cantata, 'The Holy City,' it may be mentioned that the rendering at Saltley Mission Hall, on Friday last, was the fortieth in Birmingham and its immediate environs since its production."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"The work is an honour to English art, and has elevated its composer into a place of distinction amongst native musicians."—Queen.

"A good sound musical work is this 'Holy City.' I have no hesitation in saying that it creditably represents English art, and does honour not only to the skill, but to the judgment and taste of Mr. Gaul."—Daily Telegraph.

"The reception was favourable in the extreme, and the Cantata must henceforth be classed among the successes which the Birmingham Musical Festivals have brought to light."—Standard.

"'The Holy City' is evidently the work of a thoughtful as well as a clever composer, and should make its mark among thoroughly English productions of a sacred character."—Musical Times.

"A most interesting, tuneful, and scholarly work."—Manchester Courier.

"This fine work will considerably enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation as a musician."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

Vocal Score, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; ditto, paper boards, 3s.; ditto, scarlet cloth, 4s.; Voice parts, for the use of Choral Societies, each 1s. A Selection of Soprano and Contralto Movements for School Use, 1s. 3d. Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 1s.

THE LORD REIGNETH

(PSALM XCIII.)

SET TO MUSIC BY

ROBERT PARKER PAINE.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

"At the Concert of the Windsor and Eton Choral Society, at the Albert Institute, Windsor, which was crowded, a new setting to the 93rd Psalm, by R. P. Paine, was performed for the first time. Without doubt there is very much that is really grand in it. . . . Mr. Paine was warmly congratulated by members of the profession upon his success. The audience called for the composer, and the last chorus was repeated."—Buckinghamshire Advertiser.

"The second part consisted of a composition by Mr. R. P. Paine, being the first time of performance, the 93rd Psalm. . . . There is a grandeur about the composition in harmony with the tone of the Psalm. Each number was applauded, and at the close Mr. Paine twice bowed his acknowledgments."—Eton Express.

"Mr. Paine is already the composer of several works, but in none of his previous efforts, successful and meritorious as they have been, has he scored such a success. . . . The rendering of the composition was listened to by several professors of music, who have expressed the highest commendatory opinions of the work, and without doubt Mr. Paine has exhibited exceptional ability."—Windsor and Eton Gazette.

JOAN OF ARC

AN HISTORICAL AND DRAMATIC CANTATA

WORDS BY

FREDERICK ENOCH

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. The music displays more skilful workmanship than any music we have received from the same hands. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"Said Robert Schumann, 'Melody is Art's battle cry, without which music is naught.' An entire subscription to this safe creed has been the secret of the great success of Mr. Alfred R. Gaul in the past with his compositions, and its continuance ensures beforehand a favourable reception for this his latest work. 'Joan of Arc' is launched on what we believe, and certainly anticipate, will prove a brilliant career."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

WRITTEN BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

(OP. 36.)

"An unaccompanied choral prayer, 'Lord of life, and light, and glory,' rises to a still higher plane. Solidly written, and laden with rich yet not recondite harmonies, this number is likely long to survive the occasion that gave it birth. It shows how well Mr. Mackenzie can write in the broadest style for a mass of voices. The lead-up to the National Anthem belongs to a still higher order of things. Constructed with rare art, it answers to the ideal of preparation for a climax, and works upon the feelings with immense power till 'God save the Queen' comes in as an ultimate expression."—Daily Telegraph.

"The reception of the Jubilee Ode proved unmistakably that it had thoroughly taken hold of public favour, and this is a fact agreeable to note seeing that the work was entirely of home growth."—Standard.

"The work is short and occupies only about three-quarters of an hour in performance, but it is full of interest from the first note to the last, and in its every line displays the thoughtful and the experienced musician."—Morning Post.

NOVEMBER 1, 1887.

AN IMPRESARIO AND HIS RECOLLECTIONS.*

THE recent death of Maurice Strakosch has helped to bring into notice a little volume for which he supplied the material only a short time before his departure to a region where prime donne cease from troubling and their agents are at rest. In this book we find thrown together—with very little attempt at order, and expressed without any charm of style—a mass of recollections, many of which have considerable interest for the English reader, because they concern people with whose public life he is more or less familiar. Strakosch had a good memory, and could tell a story with considerable effect, especially when he employed what passed with him as English. He was suspected of being a master in the art of embellishment, and willing to sacrifice absolute fidelity for the sake of strong or picturesque results; but this did not affect his popularity as a raconteur, or hinder admirers from counselling him to publish his souvenirs and let a wider circle than that of a dinner table enjoy them. Strakosch took the advice, his book is before us, and we now invite the reader to share the amusement of dipping into its pages.

Strakosch devotes a little chapter to Rossini, and, on the authority of the composer's wife, relates an incident evidently accepted as an explanation of the fact that he wrote no more for the public after "Guillaume Tell." It appears that, when the first performance of that opera came to an end, Lubert, the Director, sent for Rossini to his private room and rated him soundly; "Monsieur Rossini, what have you done? Have you dared to write for the Grand Opéra of Paris such an insipid and fragmentary work as 'Guillaume Tell'? The opera is so indifferent that only one course can be taken—annul the engagement which I have been foolish enough to make with you, and give up the idea of composing 'Jeanne d'Arc' and 'Mahomet.'" The answer was "Don't let that trouble you. I repudiate the contract on the spot and add that never in my life will I compose another opera." Assuming that these words were ever spoken, Rossini, as we all know, sternly kept to them. Strakosch insists that, from the same moment, Rossini felt an extreme repugnance to the performance of his works in public; the impresario's statement being supported by an anecdote connected with the production of the "Messe Solennelle" at the house of Count Pillet-Will." "That Mass was sung," writes our author, "at the Count's mansion by the sisters Marchisio, then at the height of their career, and as Alboni, who attended on the occasion, expressed to Rossini the pleasure with which she had heard it, the master said: 'Never while I live will I authorise the performance of my Mass in public, but when I am gone, and it is produced, you, my dear Marietta, ought to sing it, because you were in my mind during its composition.'" Strakosch's stories would hardly be determinative standing by themselves, but they add to a mass of evidence going to show that the composer of "Guillaume Tell" cherished a life-long sense of the manner in which that work was treated. There can be no doubt that his resentment was extreme and lasting.

The impresario proceeds to say that, on paying a visit to Madame Rossini, after her husband's death, that sharp woman of business was not so overwhelmed with grief as to be incapable of taking steps towards a bargain. She told Strakosch that one of the dead master's last wishes was to have the "Messe Solennelle" brought out by him, and that she held the MS. score at his disposal. Our author does not say that he expected to get the prize for nothing—he knew Madame Rossini too well for that—but he seems to have been unpleasantly surprised when the widow asked 100,000 francs for a copy of the score. Strakosch at first declined to buy at the price, but, on second thoughts, agreed to the lady's terms, not deeming it altogether impossible, perhaps, to secure Alboni for the interpretation of the work. That he did persuade the famous artist to come out of retirement, and that Alboni sang the contralto part of the Mass in London, many of our readers will remember. Amateurs wondered at the time what inducement brought her out, and now the impresario tells us. Alboni's income, it appears, was 100,000 francs, of which she spent one-half upon her establishment, distributing the other among poor relations and in charity. She found it impossible, therefore, in view of the marriage of a favourite niece, to provide what she looked upon as an adequate dot, and mentioned the fact to Strakosch after refusing his offer of an engagement to go on tour with the Mass. "Why don't you sing?" said Maurice Strakosch. "In a little while you could get together the sum wanted." "Do you reckon that I should obtain 100,000 francs?" demanded Alboni. "No doubt," replied Strakosch. "In what time do you require the amount?" "Those poor children cannot wait long; I shall want the 100,000 francs in three months." "I take you at your word," cried the impresario; "in three months you shall have the money. And this is how Alboni provided a marriage portion for her niece."

Strakosch devotes a chapter to Christine Nilsson, and tells an interesting story of his first meeting with that artist. Being one day in the shop of Escudier, the Paris publisher, chatting with Merelli, a brother impresario, our author was struck by the appearance of a young girl who, passing along the street, had stopped to look in at the window. Her beauty, of an uncommon type, had such an effect upon Strakosch that he directed Merelli's attention to her. "What," exclaimed his interlocutor, "don't you know her? It is Nilsson, la petite Nilsson, whom I have engaged for five years, and cannot use at the present moment, although her voice is superb. I am trying to cancel her engagement, for I dare not let her make a début as she has never yet appeared on the stage." A short while after, Strakosch again met Merelli, who informed him that the Nilsson engagement had been rescinded, adding: "I am delighted. Not being a millionaire, the having to pay my pensionnaire a thousand francs a month was hardly pleasant." "A few years later," remarks Strakosch, with the evident enjoyment of an impresario in recording another's mistake, "that same Merelli, upon whom the Russian Court had imposed the obligation of engaging Christine Nilsson for the St. Petersburg season, paid the artist 7,000 francs a night."

Another Nilsson story is of interest. It appears that the palm of the singer was once examined by Desbarolles. Strakosch does not condescend to particulars of Desbarolles, concerning whom, perhaps, we ought to know much, but actually know nothing save that he pretended to tell fortunes gipsy fashion. Desbarolles warned his fair subject that the chief troubles of her life would arise from two causes—madmen and fire. Was the prediction verified? As to the madmen, a representative of that class of society harassed the singer in New York till the police had to be called in. He had got it into his poor head that the passionate words of love addressed to Faust by Marguerite were really intended for himself, and, under the influence of that delusion, he seized every opportunity of assuring Nilsson, by running after her carriage, blowing kisses, and so on, that her affection was reciprocated. On one occasion he found his way to the apartments of the prima donna, threw open the door, and to the astonishment of a large party exclaimed: "Marguerite, embrace me." Then the officers of the law intervened. At Chicago much the same annoyance went on. The climax in this case was reached when the "crank" appeared with a sledge drawn by four horses, to take his bride to church. Henry Jarrett, ever watchful and ready, received him with an assurance that Nilsson was already at the altar. "You will be late" exclaimed Jarrett, "Miss Nilsson awaits you." The madman drove away and, for police reasons, gave no more trouble. Continuing his illustrations, Strakosch mentions the case of the artist's first husband, M. Rouzeaud, who, as everybody knows, spent his last days in an asylum, but this painful subject need not be dwelt upon here. And now as to the second agency—fire. The prima donna lost 100,000 francs by the burning of Chicago, and a much larger sum—Strakosch talks of a million francs—by the conflagration at Boston. The property was insured, but the office put up its shutters almost before the flames had been conquered.

Strakosch naturally has something to say anent "Stars and Agents," speaking from the depths of a life-long experience. He evidently recognises the evils of the "star" system, but is very vague when remedies are in question. As a matter of fact, the impresario can give no more practical advice than to make the best of matters as they stand. He goes on to speak of the qualities which are essential in a "star," remarking:—

"The singer who would become a star must have a marvellous voice, great dramatic talent, and the attraction of physical beauty. Her influence upon the public must be beyond dispute, and to originality she must add an iron constitution. Health, without which no stars are possible, is exacted by the operas now in vogue, and by the fatigues to which divas voluntarily submit themselves. Without rest or peace, they traverse the globe. They are not so much artists as travellers who journey, journey, without cessation, like the wandering Jew, with this essential difference, however, that the daily 25 francs of legend are sometimes replaced by 25,000. The popular prima donna sings one day on the banks of the Thames or the Seine; the following week, Rosina is on the shores of the Neva; fifteen days later you may find her on those of the Tagus, and even that is not the end. She sings for the Emperor of Russia as well as for the chief of the Mormons. Violetta will visit in the same year California, Mexico, Australia; she runs from North to South; changes of climate hinder her not, nor, which is well worthy of observation, do they have any influence upon her health."

An agent himself, Strakosch testifies with edifying frankness to the baleful influence of that class upon the state of musical affairs. Here are his words: "In great part, responsibility for a deplorable condition of things rests upon the agents. They have drawn artists into the way of ruinous emoluments: their remuneration increasing, of course, in proportion to the figure of the bargain. They should quickly discern that, under pain of killing the goose which lays the golden eggs, such an illusion as that opera depends solely upon stars should be dispelled." At the same time agents are useful, and, indeed, indispensable. "Divas cannot do without having by their side someone to watch over their interests, and relieve them from business cares, but upon that point there are still many reforms to make." Our author then pays a shrewd tribute to a man whom he styles the most celebrated of all agents—the late Henry Jarrett. "A perfectly honest man, Mr. Jarrett took extreme care of the interests placed in his charge. One might have written over the door of his office the words of Dante, modified to suit the circumstances: 'Directors who come to sign, leave all hope outside.' Mr. Jarrett allowed a manager who had engaged any of his artists but one main right, which was to pay the stipulated salary with scrupulous punctuality. . . . As an example of the conditions which he imposed upon directors, take the following, in the case of a great artist for whom he acted:—Beyond the emoluments of the prima donna, the director was required to pay all her hotel expenses, to give her the right of choosing her own apartments, and of inviting whom she would to her table. Moreover, a carriage and pair was to be always at her command. In this case—not an exceptional one—the cost of board and lodging amounted, in the first week, to 850 francs; in the last it was 4,000 francs, yet the impresario could not complain, because the diva, in virtue of the rights secured by Jarrett, was entitled to spend as much more as she pleased."

The book under notice contains several interesting sketches of artists, with whom Maurice Strakosch was brought into connection. One of these makes a contribution to the biography of Madame Albani. Our author states that the young Canadian, Emma Lajeunesse, was first introduced to him by Prince Poniatowski, who offered her services for 500 francs a month. The young girl was so thin, and appeared so delicate, that Strakosch doubted if she had sufficient strength to go through an opera. But her voice was charming, and of infinite sweetness. Strakosch having declined negotiation, Poniatowski remarked: "You are wrong about my protegée. She has a will of iron, and she will gain her point." "The prince was right," adds our author, "but Strakosch, who at that moment had half-a-dozen young artists in hand, did not care to take another in whose future he could not believe." Miss Lajeunesse went on her way after this, till, in the course of a Covent Garden season, Frederic Gye informed Strakosch that he had a new star in his company, for whom the impresario's advice was asked. In the Miss Albani thus introduced our author recognised his young Canadian, Lajeunesse. By his counsel, the début of the new prima donna was postponed till the next season, and then took place, as everybody knows, with great success. Some years later Strakosch, having engaged Madame Albani for an American tour, found himself exactly in the position of Merelli with Christine Nilsson. To the artist who had once been refused 500 francs a month, he gave 3,750 francs a night, in addition to hotel and travelling expenses.

Amid a host of anecdotes concerning other people, Strakosch interpolates one in which he speaks mainly of himself. Bottesini and Arditi having quitted the Milan Conservatoire, in 1842, with the distinction of premier prix for double-bass and violin respectively, the young artists, whose pockets were none too full, joined Strakosch in giving a concert, which brought to each the sum of 100 francs. With a part of this wealth the pianist purchased an article of first necessity—a black coat. "Strakosch indulged in such extravagance because, till that time, he had been obliged to hire the garment, and because when, after the concert, he was highly complimented by ladies of distinction, the apprentice of the tailor to whom the coat belonged kept in close attendance to remind him that the article must be returned to its proprietor the same evening. It may have been that the tailor had no very high opinion of artistic solvency." Our author's recollections of composers are not of great value, but he quotes Berlioz's sarcastic classification of singers, which is always worth repeating. "There are," said the erratic Frenchman, "three classes of singers—those who have a voice and cannot sing; those who can sing but have no voice; and those who, having no voice, and not being able to sing, do sing all the same. The last category is the most numerous."

Strakosch's anticipations as to the future of Italian opera are not of a pessimistic nature. He believes that it will regain the ascendancy temporarily lost, but, to that end, the public must cease to run after and feed the vanity of a few special "stars." "A statesman, the Marquis d'Azeglio, wrote that nations which love the arts beyond measure, and yield to extravagant admiration for artists, are nations in a state of decadence. In that thought, despite its exaggeration, there is a measure of truth; anyhow, it applies rigorously to Italian opera, the abasement of which results from the public passion for certain artists." Strakosch insists that the interpreter should not be put before the composer, who should occupy the first place, and he declares that Italian opera will revive on the day when artists who, without being "stars," have a real value, shall be accepted by the public. He goes on: "Let certain 'stars' disappear whose exigencies have brought about a deplorable state of things, and soon the artistic sky will brighten. As long as people continue to believe that Italian representations are impossible without a diva, directors in London as in Paris, at Vienna and St. Petersburg, can only make useless efforts to raise opera, ruining themselves without benefit to art." Finally, in a burst of confidence, our author speaks thus: "Such terms as five or ten thousand francs a night are not proportioned to the services rendered, and it is shameful to be obliged to state that the remunerations exacted from managers are the effective cause of a situation which everybody laments, and the results of which are serious." This is all very true and, likewise, very trite. A certain piquancy may attend the utterance of such opinions by an impresario; but the same arguments have been used over and over again without any appreciable result. Possibly the diffusion of a correct and enlightened musical taste may do something to correct the evil, but we may depend upon it that, wherever there is exceptional talent, the public will encourage its possessor to demand an exceptional price.

The last paragraph of Strakosch's book has a sad interest in view of the writer's speedy death. "Maurice Strakosch hopes to meet all his artists in a better world; there he will have no engagements to give them, which will double his pleasure in listening again to the beautiful voices which have been his delight here below. As much for them as for himself, however, he hopes that re-union in the skies will not come promptly, and he has no desire to hasten the happy moment. For the present he is satisfied to thank all those whose talent has so much contributed to make less painful the labours of his long career."

In dismissing "Souvenirs d'un Impresario," we may say that those who, like the present writer, knew its author well, will most fully understand and appreciate its contents. But such knowledge is not necessary to the enjoyment of much that is amusing and far from uninstructive.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS

By Joseph Bennett.

No. XXIII.—FÉLICIEN DAVID (continued from page 593).

Félicien David's return to Cairo was caused by the offer of an engagement as music-master to the wives of the Viceroy. It would be hardly surprising if a Frenchman of imaginative, not to say romantic, temperament felt disposed at once to accept the post on any terms; eager to penetrate the mysteries of a closely-veiled domestic life, and anticipating, it may be, the occurrence of adventures all the more exciting because dangerous. David, however, made a condition, and, for some time, insisted upon it. Objecting to walk the distance from the city to the palace, he demanded a riding horse, which the officials promptly and resolutely refused to grant. Ahasuerus may have mounted Mordecai upon his own royal steed, but there was no precedent in Eastern history for permitting a Frankish pianoforte teacher to bestride a vice-regal beast. So the negotiation hung fire, till, at last, David gave in. Curiosity about the harem and its secluded beauties overcame any sense of what was due to his own comfort and dignity. Behold, then, our master setting out on foot to give his first lesson, with imagination all aflame. On reaching the palace, he is shown into the hall of the eunuchs. There he waits, nobody saying to him a word. He goes on waiting, and still nobody speaks. Strange! but, unacquainted with the usages of Oriental dignity, what is a poor foreigner to do? At last, David breaks a silence he can no longer preserve, and desires to know where his illustrious pupils may be found. "Here," answers one of the shrill-voiced personages around him. The astounded professor demands explanations, and it then appears that the Viceroy never had the smallest intention to place a handsome music-master in contact with his ladies, who were to receive instruction at second hand. "The Frank," decided his Highness, "shall teach the eunuchs, and the eunuchs shall teach the sharers of my affections." But the Frank naturally objected. The houris of the harem were one thing, their repulsive guardians were quite another, and David promptly made up his mind that he would have nothing to do with them. But how to get out of the affair? Fall back, of course, upon the denied steed. David did this. He could not walk to the palace under the fierce Egyptian sun, and a horse he must have. "A horse you shall not have," answered the authorities; whereupon the engagement altogether fell through.

In 1835, the plague visited Egypt. David, with a companion, fled before it into the Syrian desert, and, after some rough experiences, found himself at Gaza, whence he travelled along the coast to Beyrout, there taking ship to Genoa, reaching his destination after a fatiguing and perilous voyage of not less than forty days.

It has already been stated that David's Eastern experiences affected the entire future of his musical life. Presently we shall see how fully and with what strength this was done, but here may be quoted the very pertinent observations of M. Azevedo, who, after tracing the master's career so far, remarks: "More desirous of stating the simple facts than to find occasion for grandiloquent phrases and exercises of rhetoric, we have systematically avoided, in telling the story of Félicien David's Eastern travel, all tirade upon the impressions which must have been made upon him by what he saw in the ancient land of Egypt. That he felt those impressions as vividly as possible cannot be doubted. But they could not at once exert their full influence upon the spirit of an artist who was a prey to the uncertainties of a precarious life, to physical sufferings caused by intense heat, and to the moral distress attending exile in a barbarous country. To colour the Egyptian sojourn after the work which it inspired, would be to produce an inaccurate representation. We have taken every care to avoid a mistake into which it is so easy to fall. If the comparison may pass: certain white truffles have, when one eats them, the taste of garlic, but leave in the mouth an after-taste of pine-apple. So with the composer's Eastern travel. We have given the prosaic side. Those who desire the poetic phase—the pine-apple flavour—have only to read in David's history the musical chapter entitled 'Le Désert.'"

Our composer utilised the forty days between Beyrout and Genoa, and another forty spent in quarantine off the Italian port, by writing pieces for brass instruments—more in the way of experiment than anything else. On landing, David journeyed to Marseilles, where he arrived on June 19, 1835, and, soon after, performed his "Brises d'Orient" in public; giving, between the pieces, some account of his adventures in the East. His next stopping place was Aix, the home of his youth; but finding the cholera there, David took refuge at Peyrolles, in the house of a sister, whose domestic peace and comfort he shared for two months. At the end of that period the composer went on to Paris, hoping there to make his "Brises d'Orient" favourably known, and also to obtain the book of an opera from a brother in the St. Simonian faith—M. Duveyrier. Soon after he reached the capital the first object failed miserably. David published "Les Brises d'Orient" at his own expense, only to find that the Parisians were utterly indifferent. Presently came a fire to destroy both it and the plates. Here was, indeed, a cruel disaster. All the composer's hopes were bound up with his Oriental pieces, and he saw both vanish in flame and smoke. Then began another time of weary waiting for the smiles of fortune. David was not now, as before, reduced to absolute want. He had friends who obtained pupils for him, and thus put him in the way of supplying bodily needs. But to such a man lack of public recognition, a consciousness of unacknowledged worth, is far more hard to endure than physical privation. It is the hunger and thirst, the weariness and desolation of the soul. Some idea of his feelings under these circumstances may be gathered from a letter to a friend:—

"If I had to estimate the merit of my compositions by the success they have obtained, I should be able to offer myself no more than a sorry compliment. However, I work for my own gratification, because work is for me a necessity, a pleasure. God will make my productions known in His own good time. But, for that result, I am not going to ask patronage from men who do not value me. Have I a right to be proud? You tell me of the glory which should be the constant object of my labours, and of the posterity which will one day judge me better; but, my dear friend, what signifies posterity if I perish even while yet alive? Glory after death is but a vain word. It would be something if able to recompense us for the ills endured on its account. Behold me altogether in the shade. I am not made for intrigue, still less for conventional music—that which the public demand as a condition of their favour. Every composer has his style; mine, I know well, is too severe, too religious."

Though discouraged, David did not throw down his pen. On the contrary, he sought to enlarge the scope of his labours, and composed, for example, an orchestral Symphony in F, after studying those by Beethoven in E flat and B flat. M. Azevedo remarks: "He pored over those masterpieces with all the attention, all the love of which he was capable, and that is saying no little. Each note, of whatever sort, each combination of harmony or of instruments, in a word, each detail, was, on his part, the object of assiduous meditation and close research till he had discovered the reason for it." Three years passed, and our composer was still in the shade, apparently as far off the sunshine of success as ever. He became, we are told, misanthropic and even savage. But who can estimate the value to him of that period of adversity? Its uses were sweet, we doubt not, though its sting was sharp. It gave him the experience which every man should have who aspires to express the joys and sorrows of humanity; it afforded time wherein to strengthen and marshal its resources, and it taught him the patience which alone, under such circumstances, can give relief to suffering.

At length one of the composer's friends and co-religionists—an eminent engineer named Tourneux—invited him down into the country, hoping to lighten of trouble the over-charged soul. David accepted the proffered hospitality with joy. We may well believe this. Any change from the weary round of labour and disappointment in Paris could only be for the better. His rural life, which lasted three years, was the healthiest possible in all respects. He enjoyed at certain periods the cheerful society of attached friends; he was surrounded by all the sweet and peaceful influences of nature; he could work at composition when and how he pleased, and the garden, to which he became devotedly attached, gave him plenty of the change of labour which proverbial philosophy calls rest. During the time spent at Igny, David finished his Symphony in F, wrote another in E, and three movements of a third, in E flat. He composed, also, no less than twenty-four string Quintets, entitled "Les Saisons." M. Azevedo says of these works: "The quintets, in which melodic form prevails, without altogether effacing the delicacy of scientific details and the effects of piquant instrumentation, are assuredly the first sign of a transformation necessary to chamber music in the sense of a system more cantante and less involved than that of the great German masters. No one can doubt that they will have their day. Up to the present they have not been appreciated according to their merit, save by a small number of persons with fine perceptiveness." The Igny period produced, likewise, some pieces for violoncello and piano, two Nonets for brass instruments—two cornets, four horns, two trombones, and an ophicleide—and a considerable number of songs.

Signs of hope now appeared on our composer's horizon; the first being a performance of the Symphony in F at some concerts given in Paris by M. Valentino, a musician much better and wider known since than at the time in question. This was followed by a rendering of a Nonet in the same key at Musard's concerts, and most of the Quintets were played at a musical re-union organised by a M. Armingaud. The members of this weekly assembly nearly always had the composer amongst them, it being David's habit to walk into Paris (four leagues) and out again the same night, no matter what the state of the weather or the condition of the roads. On these occasions he was expected to bring a new Quintet in his pocket; hence the composition of so many. With a more hopeful state of things in the capital, David naturally desired to return thither and once more push his fortunes. He gratified this wish in 1841, taking a modest apartment in the Ile St. Louis, and putting into it one of Erard's little five-octave pianos, a present from a very faithful friend. There the master wrote the last movement of his E flat Symphony, and a number of songs and melodies, some of which quickly found their way into print.

David now had his foot on the ladder of success—on the lowest round, no doubt, but that was something, and a necessary preliminary to something higher. His pupils were now able to pay better than those who had just before given enough to starve upon. One of them consented to the terms of six francs a lesson. David regarded him as quite a California. Being in somewhat better circumstances, he left his humble lodging in the Ile St. Louis for one situated in the Rue Fontaine St. George. More than that, he ventured to buy a pianoforte on the "three years system," or its equivalent, the agreement being that he should pay fifteen francs a month. Thus situated, and in the intervals of teaching, David went on composing with ardour, and making a present of his songs to the publishers, in hope that some of them would be printed and spread his name abroad. Here, surely, was a case of obedience to the injunction: "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days." Time went on, and the light around our composer became slowly brighter. One day came to him a publisher from Lyons, who, having looked over his MSS., actually bought—bought!—"Les Hirondelles," "La Rêverie," and a Waltz entitled "La Pensée," giving seventy-five francs for the three. O joyous day! O most worthy and providential publisher! "Hope deferred," saith the wise man, "maketh the heart sick, but when the desire cometh it is a tree of life." Seventy-five francs are not much, but they were a "tree of life" to David, as solid golden proof that his music had a commercial value. The composer began to expand and look up. No more for him such "strong crying" as—

> Oh! let me hunt my travelled woes again;
> Range the wide waste of absolute despair,
> Start any hope. Alas! I lose myself,
> 'Tis pathless, dark and barren all to me.

With the light around him shining more and more unto the perfect day, larger views became possible to David, who presently saw his way to a concert which should fairly place his works before the public. He would apply for the hall of the Conservatoire, engage principal singers, band, and chorus, copy all the music with his own hand, and fill the programme with his works. Here was a mighty enterprise for a man little known and having very few friends; but David carried it through, and the story of how he did it is a remarkable proof of what can be accomplished by industry, and a resolution that takes fright at nothing. Our composer at once saw the necessity of preparing a work having new and striking features. He desired to make a "hit"—to set musical Paris on the qui vive, and force his name upon every tongue. To that end songs, quintets, and symphonies would go but a little way. What, then, to do in the year which circumstances intervened between determining upon the concert and giving it? After consideration, David resolved upon expanding an idea which came to him during his country sojourn. He had then set music to some words by an Egyptian comrade, in which were described the delight of resting amid the coolness and verdure of an oasis after journeying over the burning sands. Here was a fresh subject, having strong local characteristics, and full of great musical possibilities; one, moreover, that appealed to his experience as well as imagination, and with which he felt competent to deal. In the result he determined to compose a "programme" work—a series of striking scenes depicting life in the desert. How, from this, the Ode-symphonie, "The Desert," took form and shape in its creator's brain has been told so well by M. Azevedo that we adopt his words:—

"How could he put under the eye of the public the explanations necessary for comprehending the story to be told—explanations not to be supplied by all the resources of musical idiom? Should he place some guiding words at the head of each piece after the manner of Beethoven in the Pastoral Symphony? This plan could only allow of some general statement, and the nature of the subject demanded particulars. Should he employ the recitative form, as did Haydn in the 'Seasons'? But recitative, when not expressing strong passions and lively feeling, whether serious or humorous, is dull, monotonous, and tiresome. It would throw cold and killing shadows over a work which should be full of colour. Seeing this, Félicien David made up his mind to declaim the explanations, upon the sustained chords or tremolandos of the orchestra, as is done in melodrama. The natural poetry of the subject demanded that the descriptive text should be written in strophes. From that the Ode. The pivot of the subject being travel, necessarily represented by a March, always the same, yet modified according to the varied aspects and circumstances of the journey. . . This unique pivot exacted use of the principal means employed by symphonists when dealing with a persistent motive. Hence, the Symphony, and, from the union of these elements, the Symphonic Ode."

Having thus thought out his plan, David applied for the words to M. Auguste Collin, one of his Egyptian companions, who soon discharged his share of the task. The composer at once set to work with furious zeal and, in about three months, had "Le Désert" completed. Then his troubles began, according to a terse sentence of M. Azevedo, "Labour done, pleasure ended," which might well pass into a proverb for composers. Certainly there could not have been much pleasure in copying out all the parts with his own hand. This, however, David did, while concerning himself also about the thousand details of his forthcoming concert. With regard to these he had to put himself under great obligations, and, when all was arranged, found that 2,000 francs would only just cover the expenses. But, besides being his own copyist and manager, David did the work of ticket-seller and gratis ticket distributor. "The writer of these lines," says the biographer quoted above, "will never forget meeting Félicien David upon the Boulevard des Italiens some days before the 'Désert' concert. . . . After some words of ordinary conversation, he said 'Take a box for my concert.' 'A box!' I answered, 'it costs too much for my purse. I am sorry to say that a stall must satisfy me.' 'But it is no question of purse,' rejoined the composer; 'if I offer you a box, do you think I want you to pay for it?' 'I am afraid I ought not to accept it.' 'Nonsense. Bring some good judges with you. I want to fill the room and especially to be heard by an intelligent audience." The rehearsals proceeded, and all was ready, when the actor, Chotel, who had been engaged to read the verses, wrote to say that he could not possibly attend. Here was a crowning worry for the poor composer, who, with little time to spare, must needs run about Paris looking for a substitute; not finding one till the very day of the concert, and only then through the intervention of a lady who had influence with M. Thebeaudeau-Milon of the Odéon. This gentleman kindly consented to read, and, at last, the preparations were complete.

The night of performance (December 8, 1844) arrived, there was a large audience, and the first part of the programme, containing two choruses, two songs, and an orchestral scherzo, passed without attracting particular attention. Then came "Le Désert." M. Azevedo, who was present, shall tell how the new work was received:—

"From the first bars of the description of silence with which 'Le Désert' opens, connoisseurs saw that they had before them a true work, a genuine master. Signs of extraordinary attention could be observed in the hall. At the delicious oboe counter-subject in the March of the Caravan, there was a loud volley of applause. The 'Danse des Almées' produced enthusiasm, which worked up to an immense climax after the 'Lever du Soleil.' Seated upon a low stool near the conductor, M. Tilmant, Félicien David made himself as small as possible. He was not there for personal display, but because there was a need for his presence. If occasion arose he could communicate with the chef d'orchestre, and warn M. Thebeaudeau-Milon, who had had no rehearsal, when the reading should begin. However, as success appeared more and more definite, his look became brighter, his attitude firmer. He seemed to grow physically, as he did morally. At last, not knowing how to express his emotion, he began to sing with the second tenors of the chorus. Called for by the public at the end of the concert, he received for five minutes, cheers, stampings, and exclamations of veritable enthusiasm, which, in an instant, made amends for the sufferings and the labours of a long life of misery and torment. His friends and acquaintances, musicians, critics, congratulated him, embraced him, and shook his hand in the hall. He could not speak, and responded only by signs. The emotion of the audience was so lively, so powerful, so perfectly irresistible that, more than an hour after the performance ended, the vestibule of the Conservatoire was filled with people, who remained there to talk over the work, to sing its themes, or listen to them, all saying with one voice: 'A great composer is born to us!' On reaching home that evening, Félicien David suffered a fit of hysterics which lasted more than half-an-hour. He had risen in the morning unknown, he went to bed at night celebrated and covered with glory. What a day for the artist! What a day for his art!"

But David was 1,200 francs out of pocket by the concert, and when he sold "Le Désert" to a publisher and paid the debt, not a sou remained as a material reward for his labour and anxiety. He, however, had hit the mark of success at last. The end of all the troubles that beset unacknowledged merit had come, shadows had departed, day had dawned, and our composer stood in the full light of the sun.

KEY COLOUR.

By Franz Grœnings.

The interest which has been taken of late in discussions on the existence or non-existence of Key Colour has suggested a continuation of the subject in this paper. I find it necessary to explain that by Key Colour is meant the difference in timbre or character between a series of sounds or chords taken from one scale in comparison with those taken from another scale, and it would no doubt be better understood if it were termed Scale Colour,* because I have found during the course of one and the same discussion the term "Key" referred to, firstly, as a part of the keyboard; secondly, as equivalent to pitch (one sound); and thirdly, as synonymous with scale (series of sounds), much to the confusion of listeners and readers.

In The Musical Times of November and December, 1886, I have treated Scale Colour as regards the principal instruments which have given rise to dissensions at times—namely, the various classes of stringed instruments, and foremost among them the piano. I inferred, in summing up, that absolute or fixed scale colour does not exist; but that it exists relatively more or less in some instruments, and that it varies with the construction and manipulation of each of those instruments, and is the more pronounced, the more unevenly some notes are produced in comparison with other notes on the same instrument, the finger piano being the most uneven of all, for reasons stated on page 711 in the December number, and that, at the same time, this variation on different classes of instruments excludes the application to music generally of conclusions based upon observations made upon one or even several instruments. Those conclusions stand good for any instrument of the same class, if ever so different in pitch (not for an instrument of a different class or of different construction, if even exactly in the same pitch)—i.e., any comparative difference in character found on a piano in Philharmonic pitch between the scales of C and D flat will be observed on a piano tuned a semitone lower between the scales of the same name (C and D flat), although on the latter they sound like B and C if measured by Philharmonic pitch.

Although the contrast or unevenness of scales, conditioned or produced by the difference in timbre of the respective degrees, is not so perceptible on wind instruments as on some stringed instruments, it may be the more interesting to musicians to have it pointed out where and why slight differences arise. We have two large classes of wind instruments—namely, first, those in which the wind is applied direct from the lungs (or the mouth—à bouche); and second, those where it is applied by hand or mechanical pressure, without or with a reservoir (direct or indirect). Instruments of the first class (à bouche) are made of either brass or wood, and they differ from all the rest in one essential point, inasmuch as brass instruments rarely use a fundamental note, and the wood-wind have only the lower octave fundamental (on the clarinet an octave and a fifth), whereas on stringed instruments, and on all wind instruments not à bouche, all the notes are fundamental notes.

At the end of the article in the December number I mentioned the simple brass instruments—i.e., those which possess only one fundamental note, with its corresponding upper partials or harmonics—as disproving the existence of absolute or fixed scale colour, there being no standard pitch to be found in nature's music to fix anything to; they do not even possess relative scale colour, as they have no other scale with which to compare the quality or timbre of their natural and only scale. In the other brass instruments, the intermediate notes (between the harmonics) are supplied artificially or mechanically by gradually lowering the pitch of the instrument, semitone by semitone, through lengthening the tube in two different ways, either through a moveable slide, or with the help of valves or pistons—the slide trombone and cornet-à-pistons may be taken as representative of the two kinds of mechanism. The key or fundamental note and its upper partials on a slide trombone are produced with the slide full up (the shortest tubing), called the first position; six more fundamental notes (stepping downwards in semitones), with their respective upper partials, are made by drawing out the slide into the so-called second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh positions, thereby lengthening the tube visibly. On a valved instrument, the open notes (shortest route of wind) correspond to the first position of a trombone, the second valve to the second position, the first valve to the third position, the third valve (or the first and second valves combined) to the fourth position, the second and third valve to the fifth position, the first and third valve to the sixth position, and all the three valves down to the seventh position of a slide instrument, lengthening in that manner the tube gradually but invisibly, till, with three valves down, the vibrating air column is knocked about through a perfect labyrinth of bends and gangways. The variety in timbre of some notes on a brass instrument depends on two causes—(1) on the length of tubing employed to produce it—namely, whether a note is produced as a lower harmonic (or partial) on a shorter tube, or as a higher harmonic on a longer tube (this refers also to wood-wind)—e.g., may be produced on a valved instrument with the second valve down as the sixth harmonic (or fifth upper partial) of or with second and third valve down as seventh harmonic (sixth upper partial) of or with all the three valves down as eighth harmonic (seventh upper partial) of

* Schumann calls it "Charakteristik der Tonarten," which might be freely paraphrased "comparative character of the modes and scales."

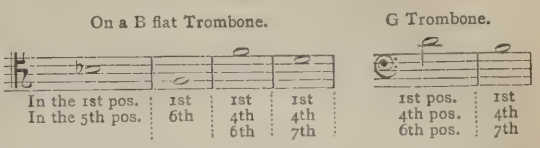
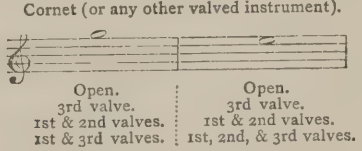
It depends (2) on the shape and number of curves and bends of the tubing. If the necessary tubing for a French horn were bent like a cornet, with short and sharp curves instead of circular, its character would be altered. To speak generally, the tone of a brass instrument changes from a round and noble towards a rough or even blatant quality, as the shape varies from circular to angular, on account of the additional resistance to be overcome in blowing. Sound travels so easily along St. Paul's whispering (or any other circular) gallery, because it goes in an infinite number of small segments, being thrown off constantly in obtuse angles of nearly 180 degrees, losing thereby little of its original strength. If the sides of the gallery were built in the shape of an octagon, it would take a little more than a whisper to get the sound to the other end—although the distance traversed would be less—on account of force expended in sharper angles on the panels. Any bend or curve offers resistance, and requires, therefore, additional force to overcome it; hence in a common speaking tube, angles and sharp curves are avoided. Very few brass instrument players prefer a hard tone; but if they do, they choose for that purpose an instrument with rather angular instead of semi-circular bends. To prove that the timbre of tone slightly, but surely and gradually, alters (1) with lengthening of tubing, and (2) with the number and shape of bends or curves, try carefully the following experiments, and I think it will be found that the quality of tone deviates (and in my opinion deteriorates) from the original timbre with lengthened tubing and increased bends. As to length of tubing only, play (or better, listen carefully to) one of the following notes, produced in the different positions mentioned below it:—



We know that on a valved instrument, any note produced by the third valve can be played by the first and second valves combined, because the length of additional tubing in both cases is the same; but in the latter case we have more resistance to overcome, as the wind is sent round through twice the number of valves with their additional tubes and bends, and it will therefore be found that a note on the third valve is more assimilated in character to the open note than if produced by the first and second valves; the contrast is greater still if that identical note is sent through the circumlocution office, by making it run through all the three valves and their corresponding gangways as in the last of the following examples:—



We see, therefore, that on a brass instrument, the harmonics of any one position are alike in timbre, inter se, but that the timbres of the various sets of harmonics on the same instrument alter gradually, in the same measure as they recede from the first position of a slide instrument, or from the so-called open notes of a valved instrument. Scale colour on brass instruments must, therefore, depend on how the notes of one scale are shuffled together from various positions in comparison with those of another scale; but any such relative qualities remain the same, whether produced on a B flat, G, or F trombone, whether on an E flat, B flat, or A cornet, &c.; they are therefore not conditioned by any quality adhering to an independent and fixed pitch in the abstract, but depend solely on the construction and mechanism of the instrument, whatever the pitch of its natural notes are; that is to say, if any difference is established between the scales based on the first and the seventh positions of a trombone, it would stand good for B flat, G, and F trombone alike, which means, when translated into, say, Philharmonic pitch, that the same difference in timbre between the scales of B flat and E natural (Philharmonic pitch) on a B flat trombone, will be found to exist on a G trombone between the scales of G and D flat in Philharmonic pitch, and on an F trombone, between F and B. In the same way on a valved instrument, comparative characteristics based, say, on the first valve only and all the three valves, which would mean on a B flat cornet the scales of A flat and E in Philharmonic pitch, would be found to exist with the A crook on, in the scales of G and E flat, and on a soprano (E flat) cornet, between the D flat and A scales in Philharmonic pitch, or in about C and A flat in French pitch, though written for cornet in all these cases as B flat and G flat scales. The natural French horn (stopped by hand, instead of valves) will furnish other clear proofs of this, as the contrast between open and stopped notes is so much greater. Any comparisons made between the written scales of, say, F and G for

* Many cornet players are unaware of the existence of the seven fundamental notes:

Jules Levy produces them with ease in his cadenzas.

French horn, would refer with the F crook to B flat and C, with the D crook to the G and A scales of any one standard pitch.

I pointed out before (December 1, p. 711) that, as a piano gets older, the differences between white and black keys become more marked. Something similar, yet totally different as regards the respective degrees of the scales, takes place on brass instruments, as the slight differences between the open notes or the first position respectively and all the rest become more prominent in time through wear and tear of the valves, and of the so-called stockings in a slide instrument. The above experiments should, therefore, be tried on old instruments as well as on comparatively new ones; the pistons at first fit air tight, but later on only the open notes (direct route for air column) remain as before, whereas all the others become rougher, requiring more force in blowing, through wear of pistons; the trombone furnishes a better proof still, as the moveable slide is in the first position pushed against pieces of cork in the sockets, and is likely to retain the same quality of tone in that position, whereas all other positions depend for easy blowing greatly on a tight fit of the stockings, which are attached to the ends of the fixed tube, and over which the slide is constantly moved to and fro, necessitating a gradual deterioration of all notes produced in any other position than the first.

A trombone, therefore, is greatly to be envied, as (very different from ourselves) it does not wear out in the body, but merely in the stockings; had I to write a "matter of fact" sequel to the sentimental, but once so popular "I would I were a bird," I know what the first line of my new song would be!

MUSICAL REMINISCENCES.

By Henry C. Lunn.

However little those who rise to a good social position in the world may care to be told of the sayings and doings of their early days, there can be no question that relations and friends who are blessed with retentive memories are always ready to remind us of them. At Christmas gatherings, for example, how often do we find that a member of the family who has attained high rank, perhaps as a doctor, a barrister, or a soldier, is taken down from his pedestal and compelled, at least, to try and remember some commonplace action which, although vivid in the recollection of those who lovingly watched the growth and development of the child, has almost faded from the mind of the man. If, then, reminiscences thus linger in private circles, can it be wondered at that in the more extended circle of the artistic world every little detail respecting the men of eminence should be treasured up and retailed from time to time with the assurance that they will be warmly welcomed by their many enthusiastic admirers. I would even go further than this, and say that it is the bounden duty of all who have ever come into contact with, or possess any pieces of information concerning, the prominent men in art, science, or literature, to place the result of their experience on record. Let me premise, however, that in stringing together some few scraps concerning musical "people I have met" (now passed away) I have carefully avoided intruding my personality before the reader's eye, a caution which has been strongly forced upon me by the perusal of books in which the great name of an artist has been eclipsed by the small name of an author—where, for instance, such a title as "The Life and Times of Beethoven, by John Jones," should more truthfully have been "The Life and Times of John Jones, with some interesting Recollections of Beethoven."

When I, with a deputation of the students of the Royal Academy of Music, attended the funeral of Attwood, and was told that he was really a pupil of Mozart, the link with a time so long past seemed more extraordinary than when I afterwards began to reflect on the youth of what may be termed modern music. Often had Attwood spoken to, and been recognised by, me as one of the eminent artists of the day; but that he had as a student spoken to and received counsel from Mozart was not known to very many of the young artists surrounding him until it was too late to hear from his own lips any events of his interesting early life.

Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Goss was one of the solid theorists of his time, and universally looked up to as a reliable authority upon "Harmony," which, it need scarcely be said, was almost in its infancy in this country when he published his book on the subject, afterwards so popular both with amateurs and professors. A sound musician himself, he disliked controversy; and, embodying in his compositions the tenets he held, received the unanimously favourable opinion of the world upon their merits as the best criticism on the truth of his theoretical convictions. A man, he would often say, could always write if he had studied music and had anything to say; and if he had not, no "system," ancient or modern, would make his utterances of the slightest importance. His simple nature and unostentatious manner endeared him to all his pupils; and many now well-known composers freely acknowledge the inestimable value of his instructions.

When "Master William Sterndale Bennett" began to make a name as one of the most promising pupils of the Royal Academy of Music, he had so thoroughly earned the admiration and esteem of his fellow students that, so far from any tinge of jealousy being created at his success, all were delighted to aid him by any means in their power. To see him modestly and unassumingly conducting the evening orchestral rehearsals then given in the institution, and impressing upon the pupils who had just entered the Academy the importance of listening to every note of Beethoven's Symphonies as one of the most valuable lessons they could receive, was a pleasure to which every student looked forward; and that the earnestness of his character was equally manifested at a game of marbles in the playground the next morning is a proof that even at this early period of life he had no desire to pose as a "musical prodigy." I have said that all were ready on every occasion to aid him at any moment; but, indeed, he gave the students but few opportunities, for his retiring nature seemed to hold him back from requesting them to play his own orchestral works, so that he might judge of their effect. One morning, however, is impressed upon my memory, for during an instrumental rehearsal he entered the room with some music in his hand, and saying that he had just written a movement which he wished to try with the orchestra, seated himself at the pianoforte and performed the Barcarole in the F minor Concerto. How he played it—how exquisitely the notes in this now well-known little gem dropped from his fingers—will never be forgotten by his hearers. It need scarcely be said that the expressions of delight at the conclusion were deafening, nor indeed—knowing how he hated applause—need it be recorded that he escaped from the room as soon as he had cordially thanked the students for their assistance. I have often wondered whether any record is still in existence of the composition which in Bennett's early days was known as the "Academy March." Not only was this thoroughly original and highly eccentric work performed annually on the birthday of the Superintendent, the Rev. F. Hamilton, but it was constantly heard, on all kinds of instruments, in the holiday hours of the students; and at one of the balls in the concert-room a pleasing reminiscence is the performance of a four-handed set of quadrilles on the pianoforte by Sterndale Bennett and Charles Lucas (afterwards Principal of the institution), in which the "Academy March" was used as a theme and "developed" to an alarming extent. The excessive refinement of Bennett's playing may be readily imagined by all conversant with his compositions, for never was the nature of an artist more faithfully reflected in his art. Anything approaching to noise jarred upon his nerves; and almost his last words were "Too loud, too loud," referring to some pianoforte performance he had lately heard. Most emphatically did he declare that the delicacy of music would be lost when the Hanover Square Rooms were closed to the art which had brought them into celebrity; and, as Principal of the Academy, he dreaded the idea of removing the concerts of the institution to St. James's Hall. The shock of this change was, however, spared him, for his death took place before a single performance of the pupils was given in the new locality.

Of Mr. Cipriani Potter—a friend of Beethoven, and one of the most earnest pioneers in the cause of classical music in England—little can be said that has not been already eloquently put forth in an interesting lecture on his life and works, given by Sir George Macfarren at one of the meetings of the Musical Association. The best proof of the result of his teaching undoubtedly consists in a record of the names of his many eminent pupils; but his admirable method of tuition can only be judged by those who received the benefit of his instruction. Not only, for example, was he a perfect master of fingering himself, but he so explained his system that any attentive pupil became in a short time proficient in this important branch of the art. "Finger as you phrase" (his unvarying maxim) would, of course, have been meaningless had he not taught the art of phrasing so thoroughly that nobody could misunderstand him. That "Elocution is Music," he said, was freely admitted, but that "Music is Elocution" seemed not so generally understood; and his object, therefore, in training the finger as carefully as a singing-master trains the voice was at once made manifest even to those who had previously regarded pianoforte playing merely as a "pretty accomplishment." He often alluded to the circumstance of his being introduced to Beethoven as "the young Englishman who knew all his Sonatas by heart," and also to his excessive nervousness when the master requested him to play one. Taking lessons upon these works from him was almost like taking them from the composer himself, for he would often start up, and—saying "Beethoven told me it was to be played so"; "Here was where Beethoven always introduced a sforzando," or "This is the true time"—reproduce the original idea so vividly as to create a deep impression upon his hearers. Years after he had resigned his office of Principal of the Royal Academy of Music I met him in a railway carriage, on his return from the seaside. He was then ill, and cautioned by his doctor against talking; but, in spite of my reminding him of this, he scarcely remained quiet for five minutes. The beauty of the weather enlivened him: "On just such a morning as this," he said, "I was sitting on a stile with Beethoven, after a lovely field walk," and then he rattled on with fragments of their conversation, some of which was so confidential that he would occasionally beg me not to mention this or that observation of the great composer, because "many people would not believe it." At his journey's end his servant met him; and my fears that I should never see him again, as I grasped his hand at parting, were unhappily fulfilled by his death, which occurred but a short time afterwards. Mendelssohn, who often came to the Academy, paid a high compliment to Mr. Potter as a teacher, in the office of the institution, a short time before Bennett visited him in Germany. "I will receive your young friend," he said, "with pleasure. I will put him forward at the Gewandhaus Concerts, and do everything to promote his interests; but I will not give him a lesson: he is your pupil, and you shall have the whole credit of it." And yet we are constantly told, even in books, that "Sterndale Bennett was a pupil of Mendelssohn."

Amongst the many musicians of these days I must especially mention Sir George Smart (a connecting link with the time of Handel through his intimacy with Joah Bates), who, when "Mendelssohn's Letters" were published in an English translation, a review of which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES, sent me a communication on the subject, from which I extract the following:—"I beg you to pardon my calling your attention to the letter to his mother, dated Leipzig, October 4, 1837—page 133—in the translation by Lady Wallace. At the bottom of the page, in a note, it is stated 'St. Paul' was performed for the first time in England at this festival (meaning Birmingham). This is incorrect. The first performance of 'St. Paul' in this country was at the Musical Festival, on Friday morning, 7th October, 1836, at St. Peter's Church, Liverpool; principal singers, Madame Caradori Allan, Mrs. W. Knyvett, Mrs. A. Shaw, Miss Birch, Mrs. Wood (late Miss Paton), Messrs. Braham, Bennett, E. Taylor, A. Novello, and H. Phillips; Conductor, Sir George T. Smart; Leader of the band, Mr. F. Cramer." In another letter—marked "Immediate"—he says: "I have discovered that I conducted Spohr's first Concert in London, on 8th June, 1820, in the 'New Argyll Rooms.'" As verifying events and dates, which I have often seen misstated, this information is valuable. When I visited Sir George, in Bedford Square, in the year these letters were written, his table was strewn with communications from Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Weber, and many other of the great composers. He was a fine, hale old man, and full of enthusiasm for the art with which he had been for so many years associated in this country. Certainly he told me that when he played, his fingers "did not run so easily as they used to do"; but, considering that he was then eighty-five years of age, this is perhaps scarcely to be wondered at.

EDOUARD REMENYI, the famous violinist, has paid a visit to Durban. He has so charmed the good folks of the place that, if the newspapers truly represent popular views and conditions, they seem to have broken out into an epidemic of ecstatics. Even the calm compositor and imperturbable editor have yielded to the intoxicating influence of excitement and have permitted the accredited reporter to deliver himself as follows: "Another sea of upturned faces, gazing with almost mesmeric fascination on the closed eyes of the old man, who charms with his fiddle—not like the Indian juggler, with his pipes, cobra-di-capellos—but human hearts and human minds, enclosed perhaps, in many cases, in tenements quite as bad, perhaps worse, than the most respectable cobra that ever crawled. But whatever was evil the old Hungarian charms away; and whatever was pure and good he plays upon and forces to dance attendance on his music. Such has been Remenyi's record for the passing week. Another sea of upturned faces—another triumph for Remenyi—and each succeeding night has the scene been repeated." This is very touching and poetical for a beginning, but the description of the Concert abounds with "gems of thought," to which the "mesmeric fascination" is weakness itself. Further we read—"To-night is Remenyi's last night, and the military are likely to be present in force." Why, or what for is not stated. Was it to keep down the enthusiasm with the strong arm of the secular power? It certainly would require the boldest regiment of soldiers besides the posse comitatûs to restrain the ardour of the author of such a peroration as the subjoined:—"Anyway, it is Remenyi's last night, and the chances of his returning to the city again, for some time at any rate, are remote in the extreme. It will doubtless be a common phrase next week, 'Oh, I wish I'd heard Remenyi,' but that will not bring him back again. After to-night his appearances will be merely a pleasant dream to all who have seen him—a dream of murmuring winds and whispering trees; of trickling streamlets gliding like silver threads under the sheen of the moon, keeping tune to the wild moaning of the pine branches in the forest; of rugged Hungarian mountains over which towers the hovering eagle preparatory to falling noiselessly upon his screaming prey—a dream of other lands, and other people; of sunny Italy and favoured France; glorious Spain and busy Germany—a dream of musicians and composers; of operas and ballets; of men and women, and out of which stands in bold relief the smiling face of an old man, over which the golden sunlight hovers with a tender caress—the image of a golden genius showing out of the black setting of oblivion. With those who do not see and hear him before he goes, these pleasant fancies and happy memories will not exist; but they must not be surprised if, in after years, when asking for a description of the man and his playing, they get for a reply the three words, 'He was Remenyi.'" Why is this genius compelled to waste his sweetness on the desert Kaffararia? Are there no journals in the more civilised cities hungering for his presence? Is there no vacancy for a musical critic in the Metropolis? Does he not possess all the qualities for such a post, including an indifference to the rules of syntax, and a lofty avoidance of the subject which is ostensibly the theme of his discourse?

The number of Harvest Thanksgiving Services which have been given in various churches during the past few weeks is the highest possible testimony of their value and usefulness. They are now so firmly established, and their influence is so fully recognised, that they seem to have been handed down from a remote age. The fact is that it is scarcely a quarter of a century since they were proposed, and the first Harvest Festival as a church service duly celebrated. The idea was first suggested in a publication called the Penny Post, and the first realisation of the idea was, it is understood, carried out at Frittenden, in Kent. The use of Harvest hymns, intended to modify the usages at Harvest homes, is probably of earlier time. At one time the "Harvest home" was celebrated with a "Church hallowing." It was a happy thought which prompted the union of the celebrations. At first the service preceded the customary observances. "The labourers of the different farms collected on the village green, and the bells broke forth into a merry peal as the men from each farm, headed by their master, and accompanied by a bailiff carrying a banner with the name of the farm worked upon it, marched two and two into church to the strains of the brass band of the Volunteers." Again, "After dinner, each farmer providing for his own workmen and workwomen, various games were played in the fields. The two that attracted most attention were that of racing after cheeses rolled down a steep hill, and the old English game of quintain." The Rector of Frittenden, in his "Scheme for a Harvest Home," gave full particulars as to management, quantities of provisions, estimated cost, and other useful suggestions and facts, universally applicable. His scheme was based upon his own experience on August 28, 1863. It included a service in the church, with a few Harvest hymns such as might be sung by a country choir of limited means; a labourers' dinner, games, and rural music; athletic sports for prizes; dancing from seven to nine. At nine, "go to rest and be thankful." He suggests, for the benefit of others who may be inclined to follow his example, that the service should be "choral if possible, with a short sermon." The directions concerning recreation and the refreshments occupy the larger portion of the details. In the majority of cases in the present day the choral service has become the greater feature, and the "banquets and the games" seem to have been kept in the background, if they have not been forgotten. The racing after cheeses, and the old English game of quintain and their various local varieties of sports, with the "dancing from seven to nine," are never alluded to. Have we grown better than our fathers?

The Sunday Sacred Musical Society, in their endeavours to provide Concerts of music on Sunday afternoons, have not been well advised as to the plan of proceeding. They selected Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang," an interesting work to begin with, but the place of meeting, the Princes' Hall, is not well adapted for effective choral performances, therefore the first Concert, given on the 16th ult., was not altogether so successful as it might have been from a musical point of view. There is no organ in the hall, and the arrangements for the disposition of a band and chorus were more or less of a makeshift character. There was a small but good band, led by Mr. Val Nicholson, but, small as it was, the players were cramped, and the chorus being separated, some on the platform, some in the balconies above, were deficient in agreement, and the utmost efforts of the Conductor, Mr. J. Munro Coward, were directed to overcoming the disadvantages of the arrangement. The solo singers, Miss Agnes Larkcom, Miss Griffin, and Mr. Kellie, sang well and successfully, but the performance as a whole was unsatisfactory. The Society in beginning and ending the function with prayer have, in the opinion of many, made a grave mistake. If their object is that of "giving the people of the Metropolis opportunities of hearing the sacred works of the great masters on Sundays," they should be presented in a worthy manner in places better adapted to convey correct impressions of them. If the movement has the sympathy of "rich men furnished with ability," no charge should be made at all for the "sittings," as the seats are called. The addition of a shortened form of religious service may possibly offend the prejudices of many whom it might be desirable to attract by the power of the music. If it be necessary to make a charge it should be of the smallest, for those who can afford to pay for "sittings" can select other times to assist in such musical performances. The religious portion of the ceremony would be more reverently done in a place set apart for worship. The assembly would be subject to less embarrassment as to the manner in which they should conduct themselves. It would be better for the promoters to revise the whole of their method of procedure. The best plan would be to drop the scheme altogether.

M. Théodore Massiac has lately contributed to La Figaro a long and interesting article upon the musical and dramatic agencies which abound in France, as everywhere else. Within the compass of this "Note" we cannot show the working of a system which, if M. Massiac may be credited, is degrading to the artist and demoralising to the agent. However, "business is business," and the aphorism, like charity, covers a multitude of sins. Occasionally an agent is tempted a little beyond its shelter, and puts himself in the position of an arrant rogue. M. Massiac gives several examples. On one occasion an artist was sent to fulfil an engagement in full expectation that he would fail, come back, and be good at the "office" for another commission. As a matter of fact he succeeded, whereupon the agent telegraphed to the manager: "I hear that —— has pleased the public. He must not succeed. Make arrangements to have him hissed next time." The director, in fear of the powerful office, obeyed, and the singer was soon back in Paris, and on the books for another opening. A second story tells how two vocalists and a violinist were sent into Normandy to appear at a concert. The affair being in aid of a charity, they were asked, and consented, to go for a nominal sum, the singers receiving a hundred francs, the violinist only fifty. A banquet followed the concert, and during its course the artists were complimented upon their disinterestedness. At once the Mayor intervened. "There is no question of disinterestedness," said he, "when one receives 500 francs." Imagine the astonishment of the performers as, on leaving, the Mayor paid each of the singers that sum, giving the violinist 300, according to the arrangement made with the cheating agent, whose anticipation of a good haul was thus hopelessly defeated. According to M. Massiac, the whole system of French agency in matters musical and dramatic needs reform. We can well believe it.

That modern miracle worker, Mr. Edison, is "at it again." Having got the electric light out of hand, his restless inventiveness has taken up once more with what most of us had come to regard as a discarded toy—the phonograph. A few years ago we were all talking about the phonograph. They had one, of course, at the Crystal Palace, and there eminent singers, and others, were wont to warble into it, afterwards grinding from the interior sounds supposed to be a reproduction of their most sweet voices. The instrument became a nine-days' wonder, and then was practically forgotten. But it remained present to the mind of the inventor, who now claims to have made it a thing of commercial value. "A merchant who wishes to send a letter has only to set the machine in motion, and talk in his natural voice at his usual rate of speed into the receiver. When he has finished a sheet, or phonogram, as I call it, it is ready to put into a little box made on purpose for the mails. . . . The receiver of the phonogram will put it into his apparatus, and the message will be given out more clearly than the best telephone message ever sent." This reads like an extract from modern romance of the "Coming Race" school, but what of developments that may arise? Will singers and instrumentalists sing and play into the "receiver," and scatter examples of their skill all over the globe to order? Will Rubinstein or little Hofmann make a tour of the world by phonogram, sitting quietly at home and preparing new specimens, while agents travel about displaying them? Shall we have shops for the sale of Albani, Patey, Lloyd, and Santley phonograms? May we hope—but a truce to questions which the reader can ask for himself in any number. Lucky artists of the future, if the phonogram becomes fashionable!

The phraseology of musical criticism being exceedingly limited, as impartial observers are fain to admit, unstinted gratitude is due to those who enrich the available vocabulary by any new importation, be it of foreign or native growth—the latter for choice. Hence we feel that we are acting the part of common benefactors in giving publicity to an expression culled from the columns of the Western Mail, of the 20th ult. The subject of the notice is a performance of the "Elijah," at Cardiff, and the writer, commenting on the contralto, remarks that her "principal vice is the common one of drawling between large skips." We make no apology for transcribing another passage from the same notice, which runs as follows: "The musical world is at present exercised by the opinion which extensively prevails that the oratorio, like its secular form, the opera, should be performed in character, dramatically, and with suitable scenery. The main point at issue, we presume, is whether the fact of, say, Elijah appearing before the audience in a dress such as we imagine he wore would not, at all events, be more consistent than in a swallow-tail coat and lavender kid gloves. We are inclined to agree that the oratorio would largely benefit by such alterations in its mode of performance as are being proposed."

The International Copyright Convention has been ratified, and the recommendations of the Conference have been issued. There were many States represented at this Conference, and many important ones were conspicuous by their absence. Provision, however, has been made for the admission of those who may choose to come in after. Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Switzerland, Tunis, Hayti, and the Republic of Liberia have sent in their adherence, so that a native of any one of those States can be assured of protection for his copyrights. The definition given of "literary and artistic" works is very comprehensive. It includes "books, pamphlets, and all other writings; dramatic or dramatico-musical works, musical compositions with or without words; works of design, painting, sculpture and engraving; maps—in fact, every production whatsoever in the literary, scientific, or artistic domain which can be published by any mode of impression or reproduction." Musical and dramatic authors may not only prevent their works from being reprinted; but they are protected against the public representation of their works in the original or in translations.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

The Musical Times of last month contained full particulars of the arrangements made for this Festival, and the reader has only to refer back for all the details which otherwise would have to be stated here. In the matter of general preliminary remark, there is no need to be diffuse. The attitude of the public towards the Festival was much as usual—that is to say, more than a little indifferent. No attempt at decorating the city, or at giving it a festive appearance, came under my notice, nor did I hear of any such hospitality as elsewhere promotes good fellowship and the common enjoyment. In these respects the whole affair passed off in the dullest manner. It was, indeed, suspected that lively interest would be taken in the Festival by the Socialist part of the community, to whom it afforded an opportunity of protesting against the unequal distribution of this world's goods. To prevent any such demonstration the magistrates swore in 200 special constables—a step which may, or may not, have had the effect of making the Socialists as indifferent to what was going on as were their "betters." I am not sure that public apathy can, with truth, be laid at the door of agricultural depression, which probably, on the other hand, had something to do with a diminished aggregate attendance. Anyhow, the apathy and the falling off of patronage were facts, and depressing facts, explain them how we may. Talking of features in the week's doings which were the reverse of happy, I may as well go on to speak of the chorus, and so discharge with promptitude a very disagreeable part of my task. Readers of this journal do not need to be told that the Norwich Festival chorus has never occupied a place in the foremost rank. For some reason or other, the best efforts of the members and their trainer have failed to lift the organisation above a comparatively inferior position. Some say that nature has denied good voices to the East Anglians—a statement I am not in a position to dispute. Others trace the cause to the fact that Norwich lies off the main roads of English life, in a kind of backwater, that it receives little accession of strength from without, and lacks the stimulus of energetic surroundings. Others, again, leaving such generalities, do not hesitate to declare that the chorus is managed upon a system utterly and necessarily ruinous to its efficiency. I have some reason to believe—though unable to speak from personal knowledge—that these last are very near the truth. Amateurs who take interest in such matters know that a Festival chorus needs constant watching and firm management to counteract a natural tendency towards degeneration. Some years ago, even that at Birmingham began to deteriorate. Taking alarm at a state of things so serious, the press raised an outcry, and the committee adopted sweeping measures of reform, with the result that the old position was regained. The shortcomings at Norwich have been pointed out in like manner again and again, but the same system goes on, and mischief remains rampant. It may be asked what the committee should do. I will tell them quite plainly. In view of another Festival they should obtain the services of a professor (not a local man), in whose judgment they have confidence, place him behind a screen with a nominal list of the chorus, and call upon each member individually to sing a given piece. The professor would at once strike out the voices of poor quality and all others that in his opinion would not add to efficiency. This done, the committee, heedless of long service, social position, or influential connections, should get rid of the rejected ones and fill their places with candidates who have passed the same test. A thankless task, some may say. Of course it is thankless; exceedingly disagreeable and even painful. But you cannot make an omelette without breaking eggs. Such work has often to be done in this imperfect world. The question is whether the Festival is worth it. If yes, then do it; if no, then let the Festival die at once instead of lingering in decrepitude. I do not wish to dwell in detail upon the imperfections of the Norwich chorus. They were proclaimed day after day during the Festival week, both by London and provincial critics, and their existence is no more open to dispute than the supreme and instant need for remedial measures.

After orchestral rehearsals in London on the 6th and 7th ult., and exhaustive general rehearsals in Norwich on the 10th and morning of the 11th, the performances began at St. Andrew's Hall on the evening of the day last named. The programme was a composite one, made up of Mackenzie's "Jubilee Ode," Saint-Saëns's "The heavens declare," and Mendelssohn's almost inevitable "Lobgesang." The committee must have entertained hopes that this selection would prove as attractive as "Elijah" (which usually opens the Festival at Norwich, as elsewhere), but it did not. There was a depressingly small audience, which would probably have been much smaller had not the Mayor, Sir Harry Bullard, forwarded gratis stall tickets to the members of the Corporation and their wives. But an inadequate attendance was not the only drawback the music and its performance being received with singular nonchalance. Will it be believed that the noble and rousing opening chorus of Mackenzie's Ode passed "without a hand"? the people who listened to it behaving as though it did not concern them in the least. Only once in the evening did the public rouse themselves, doing so then to applaud (very justly) Miss Liza Lehmann's expressive singing of the air "Thou, O Lord," in Saint-Saëns's Psalm. Of course such apathy always has its effect upon executants, and at Norwich tended to make less effective a performance which stood in need of all possible adventitious aid. The works given call for no remark here, Mackenzie's Ode having been recently discussed, while "The heavens declare" passed under review on the occasion of its production by the Sacred Harmonic Society some time ago. With regard to the performance under Mr. Randegger's direction, the reader will understand, after what has been said, not only that it was imperfect, but in what respect. The orchestra left little or nothing to desire, the chorus left much. Of the solo vocalists, Madame Albani and Mr. Lloyd took part in the Ode, as, assisted by Miss Lehmann, they did in the "Lobgesang." Engaged upon the French composer's Psalm were Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Lehmann, Miss Lena Little, Messrs. McGuckin, Barrington Foote, Brockbank, Alec Marsh, and Santley. Regarding their doings there is nothing particular to say.

The second Concert, given on Wednesday morning, introduced one of the Festival novelties: to wit, Mr. Bottesini's devotional Oratorio "The Garden of Olivet." In arranging the libretto of this work, Mr. Joseph Bennett followed the model which has been handed down from the German "Passion." That is to say, he employed the narrative form; taking the Scriptural story almost verse by verse, and interpolating devotional reflections, either in the form of lyrics or of Biblical texts. The most ardent partisan of the dramatic form will admit that this is a perfectly legitimate species of oratorio, having its own domain and its own special uses. There is a whole class of subjects which cannot be treated in any other way; those especially that deal with particularly sacred and solemn things like the Agony in the Garden. The book comprises two parts, respectively entitled "The Agony" and "The Betrayal." In the first we have the narrative, from the opening text, "Then cometh Jesus unto a place called Gethsemane," to the words of Christ as He looks upon the slumbering disciples: "Sleep on now and take your rest." The second part, beginning with the march of the Jews and Romans conducted by Judas, ends at the point where all the disciples forsake their Master, leaving Him in the custody of His foes. The whole story is told in recitative by a contralto voice. In selecting the reflective texts, and writing the lyrics, the librettist sought to introduce as much variety as possible. Thus the chosen passages include words of comfort and words of distress, assurances of devotion, confessions of weakness, and the expression of exceeding joy. As well as meeting, to some extent, the requirements of the subject, this variety gave the composer ample opportunity for the change and relief which modern audiences, craving for excitement, so imperiously exact. Mr. Bottesini's share in the work has been freely criticised on the ground that it is light, trivial, and therefore unbecoming the theme. The imputation appears to me so entirely at variance with fact that I am at a loss to conceive on what it is based. It might, indeed, arise from such a syllogism as this: All Italian composers produce light and flippant music. Mr. Bottesini is an Italian composer. Therefore, his "Garden of Olivet" is light and flippant. I cannot suppose that any intelligent connoisseur would found a charge upon reasoning so faulty in its major premise, and the accusation brought against the new oratorio is doubtless the outcome of an honest judgment. But where in the work is triviality? Is it in the recitatives and the setting of the Divine words? Mendelssohn himself could not have supplied these with more appropriate music. Is it in the choruses? There is not one of them that, tested by the canon of oratorio, would be found wanting in sobriety and dignity. Is it in the airs? Two of these certainly are bright and cheerful, and one of them comes in at the very climax, when Christ is left alone in the midst of His enemies. But the words are bright and cheerful also, and the fault, if fault there be, lies at the door of the librettist. In the first case, after the Christian Church has identified herself with the Divine Victim, the soprano exhorts in this wise: "Rejoice, beloved, as partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." Can the music to such words be cheerful and joyous enough? In the second case the Christian, in full view of his Lord's abandonment, has faith in Divine goodness and mercy. He sings "The Lord is my light and my salvation." Again there is no place but for the cheerful animation which Bottesini has infused into his strains. Taking the work as a whole, I see nothing that fails to harmonise with the feeling of the text, or that jars with any idea conveyed by the term "devotional." An objection that the music lacks distinctive character would be much nearer the mark. Bottesini delivers himself with eloquence and feeling, but the manner presents nothing new, nor even removed from an ordinary category. The melodies are expressive, often beautiful, and the harmonies are solid without being in any sense formal; but we are never taken away from the model which, in works of the kind, has been followed by composer after composer since Mendelssohn's oratorios saw the light. Bottesini's orchestration is somewhat disappointing. The colours are often laid on with a heavy hand, and the brass is much more freely used than required by the character of the music. Beyond this, in the way of adverse criticism, I am not disposed to go—the less because I find the Oratorio instinct with a feeling which passes from the work to the hearer. I am speaking, of course, from an individual experience—the proper basis of individual judgment. To me the music is touching and moving; as far as I am concerned, therefore, the supreme object of art is attained. Others may be unresponsive to it. Let them pronounce accordingly. As the "Garden of Olivet" will shortly be heard in London, notice in detail may be reserved till that occasion, when fuller knowledge will bring its inevitable advantages. The Norwich performance, conducted by the composer in person, was in many respects satisfactory. Improvement could hardly have been made, for example, in the delivery of the solos by Miss Marriott, Miss Wilson, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, all of whom sang as though their sympathies were entirely with the work they had to do. Special mention should be made of the gentlemen; Mr. Lloyd's rendering of a solo, "Have pity upon me," and Mr. Santley's declamation of the Saviour's words being quite hors ligne. The attendance was miserably small, although after the novelty came Dvorák's "Stabat Mater"—a masterpiece known to Norwich amateurs. It is difficult to suggest a reason, unless it be that the chorus, as arbiter of taste in the East Anglian city, exerted their influence against a more favourable result. The choral numbers of the Bohemian master's Hymn suffered from the general inefficiency of its executants, but the orchestra was up to the mark, and the soloists—those named above—gave wonted satisfaction.

The Concert on Wednesday evening was of a miscellaneous character, and attracted a larger gathering than its predecessors. It proved to be a development from the "Ballad Concert," which flourished as part of the Festival in Sir Julius Benedict's day, and also a very good thing of the kind. Among the orchestral selections were the Overtures to "Die Zauberflöte," "Tannhäuser," "Coriolanus," and "William Tell," all capitally played under Mr. Randegger's judicious guidance. The vocal pieces, too, comprised works of interest, such as the Conductor's setting of Byron's "Prayer of Nature," Gounod's magnificent song, "The Holy Vision," which secured a great success, sung by Mr. Lloyd; and a new scena, "The Song of Judith," written for the occasion by Mr. Prout, and entrusted to Miss Hilda Wilson. Madame Albani gave Weber's "Softly sighs" and Handel's "Sweet bird," and Mr. McGuckin contributed "Where sets the sun," from the "Story of Sayid," as well as Wagner's "Farewell to the Swan," with all possible effect.

Thursday morning was devoted to the second of the two Italian novelties which formed such a peculiar feature in the general scheme. Mr. Mancinelli's "Isaias" certainly made a greater impression than the "Garden of Olivet," drew a larger audience, and caused more discussion. The reasons are obvious. Apart from the sensuous beauty of some portions, the character and style of the work are uncommon in connection with oratorio; while such features as great sonority and rough vigour are adapted to catch the popular ear and win applause, such as would, perhaps, be denied to qualities more refined or less easily appreciated. The book of "Isaias," written in classic Latin verse by Dr. Guiseppe Albini (English version by Joseph Bennett), is founded upon a Hebrew legend connected with the Assyrian siege of Jerusalem in the reign of Hezekiah. Tradition has it that, by way of forlorn hope, the maidens of the city went out as intercessors to the enemy's camp, where their beauty and innocence, instead of softening the heart of the foe, inflamed his lust. A feast was improvised, the maidens were plied with wine, which a miracle changed to harmless water, and just as danger appeared most imminent, the whole host fell into what their intended victims supposed to be sudden slumber. It was the sleep of death, and the girls returned unharmed to the delivered city. These incidents, with others of an accessory character, make up the "argument" of a book which afforded considerable scope to the composer. It is, indeed, a series of striking pictures. First of all, Judith and Anna—the one, daughter of the Prophet, the other, sister of the King—lead the prayers of maidens before the altar, as, with Hezekiah, they await the return of reverend men who have gone as ambassadors to the besieging army. The venerable fathers return, describing the contumely with which they had been treated, telling of the might of the enemy, and counselling surrender. Hezekiah seeks to inspire warlike courage, the crowd without clamour for submission, and Isaiah speaks. As a prophet, he foretells the doom of the invader, and the coming of a Saviour, who shall establish the reign of justice and right. Finally, he advises the embassy of maidens; Judith and Anna declare their readiness to set out; the fair intercessors form in procession; the Temple doors are opened, and the clamouring multitude join in an ensemble of prayer and encouragement as the devoted band moves towards the city gate. The second part is no less suggestive of musical effect. King and Prophet have wandered by night outside the city, and there meet the returning maidens, who relate the manner of their reception, their danger, and miraculous escape. Then a cloud envelops the enemy's camp; angry Jehovah's fiery sword flashes in the sky, and the voice of Sennacherib is heard calling upon his dead soldiers to arise. Presently, the terrified Assyrian comes out of the darkness, bewailing the loss and ruin that has fallen upon him. Hezekiah would put the King to death, but Isaiah intervenes, foretelling the domestic treachery that shall soon end his days. Now the sun rises; crowds approach from Jerusalem, and all sing a hymn of thanksgiving. In dealing with Mr. Mancinelli's music, I shall be content with general indications, leaving details till another, and, perhaps, not far off, opportunity arises for discussing them. What then are the chief features of "Isaias"? In the first place, the composer, penetrated with the spirit of modern art, has exercised throughout the privilege of modern freedom, though not to an excessive extent. It may be that his harmonic progressions diverge most of all from orthodox rule. As to these, Mancinelli does just what pleases him. "I allow them," exclaimed Beethoven, when Schindler pointed out that the lawgivers of music had set their cannon against consecutive fifths. The Italian composer, though not yet invested with Beethoven's authority, allows a great deal more than consecutive fifths. In point of fact, he recognises nothing that would restrict his liberty. When Admiral Parker flew the signal of recall at Copenhagen, Nelson, with the glass to his blind eye, vowed he could not see it, and pounded the Danes all the harder. Mancinelli shut both eyes, and he also goes his own way. Well, on the point in question, effect is the supreme test. No rule should forbid that which the ear accepts, and as the ear can be educated to anything the domain of the modern harmonist continually expands. By-and-bye he will be in the position of an English monarch, who, as we all know, "can do no wrong." At the same time there are daring passages in "Isaias" the reason for which I fail to discern, and when a man gratuitously shakes his fist at the highly respectable and dignified figure of Orthodoxy, he should be corrected.

Mr. Mancinelli's use of the orchestra is quite modern in spirit and character, without, however, pretending to an imitation of Wagner. It is an accompanying, not a symphonic orchestra which arrogates to itself almost the entire musical significance and interest. The distinction is large and important. Leading themes, without which, it appears, musicians of our day cannot work, are freely employed, and the composer, in the course of some very long solos, resorts to declamatory passages with considerable effect. But the bulk of "Isaias" illustrates the change which has come over Italian music, without taking from it the Italian character—a change strikingly shown in Verdi's "Aïda" and "Otello." Hence we have repeated examples of the purest Italian cantilena, ensembles built up in the familiar style of Italian opera, and so on. Herein lies the charm of the work, and this, supplemented by extraordinary vigour, flaming tone-colours, and general picturesqueness, quite explains the impression it certainly made, even upon an unresponsive Norwich audience. No one can help taking an interest in the work, though I should be very sorry to find any English composer accepting it as a model for oratorio. That "Isaias" demonstrates the capacity of Mr. Mancinelli as a dramatic writer, constitutes, to my mind, its chief value. The piece was, considering all things, performed in commendable style; the solos being taken by Mesdames Albani and Lena Little, Messrs. Barton McGuckin, Alec Marsh, and Barrington Foote, the last-named among whom may especially be complimented upon his able delivery of a solo occupying some thirteen minutes. Mr. Mancinelli conducted in person, and was loudly cheered at the close of his task. Following the new work came Cherubini's Mass in C, the more temperate beauty of which stood little chance in close proximity to the "sensationalism" of Mancinelli.

The Concert given on Thursday evening opened with Stanford's "Irish" Symphony, conducted by the composer, and closed with Sullivan's "Golden Legend." I cannot commend the make-up of the programme. Stanford's work requires a close hearing, but, in point of fact, it was performed amid constant distractions, as a sort of in-voluntary. The audience came to hear "The Golden Legend," and regarded the orchestral piece as a convenient thing pour passer le temps while everybody settled down. It would serve no purpose again to discuss Sullivan's favourite work. Of course it attracted a great crowd, whose approval can only be described as complete and unanimous. The solos were given by Madame Albani, Miss Lena Little, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Alec Marsh, and Mr. Santley, the famous baritone singing the music of Lucifer for the first time, and giving it a significance such as had not previously been observed. Revelations always attend the efforts of great artists. The orchestra and chorus excited remark in different ways; the one by excellence, the other by demerit.

After "The Messiah," which was given on Friday morning, under Mr. Randegger's guidance, the Festival closed, on the evening of the same day, with Berlioz's "Faust," the success of which on a former occasion naturally led to its repetition. Again the ensemble proved faulty in a serious degree, the chorus, tired out with their week's work, being grievously inadequate. Amends were made, however, by the orchestra, whose share of the general task was admirably done, and by the soloists—Miss Marriott, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Brockbank, and Mr. Santley—who gave complete satisfaction.

The Festival will be remembered for its two Italian novelties, and, by those concerned, for the lesson of instant and thorough reform it so effectually taught.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

If the attendance at the first Saturday Concert of the season may be taken as a safe augury for the success of the series, the Directors of the Saturday Concerts ought to feel at their ease. But it is impossible to resist the conclusion that a large proportion of those present were attracted simply by the announcement of young Hofmann's appearance. Joachim himself could not have drawn a fuller audience. For ourselves, though harbouring a strong prejudice against the pushing of precocious talent, we are bound to admit that in the face of such an exceptional case our prejudice melted clean away. The sense of uneasiness and alarm which was produced by the almost uncanny spectacle of a little child out of the nursery emerging on to the platform to co-operate with a great orchestra and a great Conductor soon gave place to amused surprise and wonder, not only at the technical mastery, but the remarkable intelligence displayed by the performer. It has been said, and truly, that only a man qui a vécu can do justice to a slow movement of one of Beethoven's Sonatas or Concertos; but it is wonderful, as in the present case, how instinct can supply the want of experience. The final rondo was played with admirable brightness and rhythmic grip—indeed, the whole performance was an astonishing achievement. The occasion was remarkable as the first on which the young performer attempted to play octaves. Criticism is disarmed by such an exceptional musical organisation as that of young Hofmann's, but it is permissible to express regret at the choice of the Cadenza selected by those who are responsible for his training, and at the inclusion in his répertoire of such a tawdry piece as Gottschalk's hideous "Chanson Nègre." Young Hofmann appeared as a composer as well as an executant, contributing two trifles, in which musicianly feeling is already noticeable. His Valse, conceived in the Chopinesque vein, with a good leaven of Strauss thrown in, is a decidedly taking piece. Finally, his performance of Mendelssohn's well-known Rondo Capriccioso left hardly anything to be desired, so delicately and sympathetically was it rendered. A Concert Overture from the pen of Mr. G. J. Bennett, entitled "Jugendträume," which formed the orchestral novelty, although it may not show any advance upon his "Serenade," performed at these Concerts last year, is marked by the same vein of flowing melody and graceful orchestration which characterised his previous effort. The theme for horn, accompanied by the tremolo of the strings, is especially engaging, and the work, which is noticeable for the lucidity of the ideas set forth and a total absence of pretentiousness in its design, was very favourably received. The orchestra gave a noble rendering of Schumann's First Symphony, and the large but Gothic audience, who let the larghetto pass without any symptoms of appreciation, made up for their want of discrimination by applauding very heartily at the close. The soloist was Mdlle. Elvira Gambogi, who gave Pacini's "Il soave e bel contento," "O cessate di piagarmi" (Scarlatti), and Godard's graceful "Chanson de Florian," in a conscientious style. Excellent renderings of the "Danse des Sylphes," "Menuet de follets," and "Marche Hongroise," from Berlioz's "Faust," brought the Concert to an enjoyable conclusion.

The new Suite of ballet airs, composed by Mr. Goring Thomas for the Cambridge University Musical Society, and performed at their Concert last June, was heard for the first time at the second Concert of the series. This graceful work illustrates very happily Mr. Goring Thomas's faculty for scoring so as to show off the timbre of the various instruments, whether separately or in combination, to the greatest possible advantage. The second movement, with its charming slow waltz rhythm, is a most effective piece of orchestral embroidery. Herr Waldemar Meyer, who appeared as solo violinist on this occasion, belongs to the category of good rather than great players. He lacks the absolute confidence of the first rate virtuoso and the individuality of conception of the true artist. Besides sustaining the solo parts of Vieuxtemps's Fourth Concerto, Herr Meyer contributed Sarasate's arrangement of a well-known Nocturne of Chopin's and a couple of Spanish dances by Moszkowski. Beethoven's C minor Symphony, as interpreted by Mr. Manns's orchestra, dwarfed every succeeding number of the programme into insignificance. The vocalist was Mr. McGuckin, who was particularly successful in "Lohengrin's Farewell." The programme also included the Overture to Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," played with great spirit by the band.

Of the performance of "The Golden Legend," which occupied the programme of the third Concert of the series, little need be said. The cast consisted of Madame Nordica, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. Iver McKay, Watkin Mills, and Horscroft, the efforts of all being duly appreciated by the audience. The Crystal Palace Choir co-operated in an efficient manner, the Evening Hymn being given with specially good effect.

MR. E. PROUT'S CANTATA "THE RED CROSS KNIGHT."

"All's well that ends well," says the proverb, but if a good end is to be desired, surely a good beginning is not to be despised. The successful production of Mr. Prout's new dramatic Cantata at Huddersfield, on Friday evening, the 7th ult., augurs well for its future career. Everything indeed pointed to a favourable issue. The Choral Society at Huddersfield enjoys high repute even in the north, where there are so many excellent companies of singers; the list of solo vocalists included well-known names, and Huddersfield had already had a taste of Mr. Prout's music last spring, when his Cantata "Hereward" was performed by the same Choral Society. As a detailed account of the book and music of "The Red Cross Knight" appeared in last month's Musical Times, the performance of the work will now be chiefly the subject of comment.

The Town Hall was filled in every part, and an enthusiastic reception given to the composer as he took his seat at the conductor's desk. The simple yet effective overture, with its musical portraits of the Red Cross Knight, King Richard, and the Lady Edith was, with the exception of the opening phrase, brilliantly rendered. In the first three sections of the Cantata, the movements which appeared to give the greatest satisfaction were the long and important Lord Morice scena, the graceful chorus for female voices, "Gaily the herald," the duet between the Lady and the Knight, the "Welcome tidings," and the "Tournament" choruses. The "Welcome Tidings" was magnificently sung by the choir: the singers were evidently on their mettle, and the effect was immense. Mr. Prout hitherto had strictly observed the stern law in force at the Borough of Hackney Choral Association, but here he had to give way, and repeated a portion of the movement. This, indeed, was the only encore accepted during the evening. The writer in last month's notice spoke of the composer as having put forth his full strength in the "Tournament" chorus. He was right, although he only formed his opinion of it from the vocal score. The orchestration gives to it its chief life and colour: now bright as the Knights assemble, now sombre as the Lord Morice falls in fight, now delicate as the chorus in mournful tones bewails the Lady's fate.

The recitative and air for tenor at the opening of part four is one of the best numbers of the work. There is much variety in it, but the graceful "love" motive, which is so prominent throughout, gives unity to the whole. The delicate orchestration, as surmised, adds much to its effect.

In scene five, where the Lord Morice, with evil intent, pursues the Knight after his defeat, there are several points of interest. The "tramp of horse" is successfully imitated; the solemn tones of trombones and tuba appropriately give out the chords accompanying Morice's satirical exclamation "Peace I bring, the peace of death"; and the tuneful trio at the end admirably suits the words. Considerable and effective use of representative themes may also be noted. The scena for soprano at the beginning of the sixth scene comes out very well. The lively chorus, "Quaff the mead," is similar in character to pieces in Mr. Prout's earlier cantatas. The graceful scoring in the song and duettino, "The lark to heaven upsoared," would help to win favour for the music, even if it were of inferior quality; but it is very good. By the way, the opening phrase reminds one, but not unpleasantly, of "Am stillen Herd" in "Die Meistersinger." The Finale is bright, but we think the composer might have written something stronger; after the two choruses in the earlier part of the work to which we have specially alluded, it proves disappointing. So, at least, it seemed at a first hearing.

The solo vocalists were Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Watkin Mills, and Mr. Riley. Of these the first four deserve high praise. Miss Marriott and Mr. Lloyd carried off the chief honours. The orchestra was not all that could be desired. At the close of the performance Mr. Prout was re-called, and in a few words he thanked the Huddersfield choir for their splendid singing. Mr. J. North, the chorus-master, was also summoned to the platform, and applauded with true northern vigour.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

About a fortnight earlier than usual, these entertainments of world-wide celebrity have started on their successful course. The aspect of St. James's Hall on the 24th ult. was more suggestive of the close of the season, when all the great artists are present, than the opening, which is usually a quiet affair. Every part was densely crowded, and the stalls extended far to the left of the main entrance. Without doubt this unwonted state of things was due to the engagement of little Josef Hofmann, and we cannot blame the public for availing themselves of one of the few remaining opportunities of hearing this marvellous lad, previous to his American tour, which everyone hopes will be followed by his withdrawal for a time from the fatiguing atmosphere of the concert-room. As we deal elsewhere with his recent Recitals in London, there is no occasion to speak at length of his efforts before Mr. Arthur Chappell's audience. The mere manipulative skill shown in the rendering of Rameau's Gavotte and Variations and Mendelssohn's "Spinnlied" was extraordinary, but the meaning and artistic fervour he threw into his playing were far more phenomenal. No diffidence in attacking a passage, no self-repression or evident consciousness of limited powers; all was broad, magisterial, and thoroughly natural. It is a curious coincidence that within a year of the departure of Franz Liszt, by common consent the greatest virtuoso of the pianoforte who ever lived, we should witness the appearance of a youthful genius apparently qualified by nature for an equally wonderful career. Apart from the appearance of Master Hofmann, the Concert was very successful. Spohr's tuneful Quartet in A (Op. 93) received an ideal interpretation at the hands of Madame Norman-Néruda and Messrs. Ries, Hollander, and Howell. The gifted Moravian violinist is always at her best in Spohr's works, and might draw upon them more frequently, as there are several of his Quartets which have yet to wait for a hearing at these Concerts. Madame Néruda gave as her solo the Prelude, Romance, and Scherzo from Franz Ries's Suite for violin (Op. 27), which she has played on many former occasions. The movements are not particularly interesting as music, but they serve to display her technical skill to advantage, and the audience tried hard to obtain an encore, which, however, she declined to grant. Miss Liza Lehmann is deservedly one of the most popular vocalists at these Concerts, and she sang in her most charming manner the air "Thou, O Lord," from Saint-Saëns's 19th Psalm, which had roused the Norwich public to enthusiasm, and two German songs, for the last of which she had to accept an encore.

MR. WALTER BACHE'S RECITAL.

Mr. Walter Bache gave his customary Pianoforte Recital at St. James's Hall, on the 22nd ult. His programme, made up entirely of the compositions of Franz Liszt, included the Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 5, "Héroïde élégiaque," and the "Années de Pélerinage (Deuxième année "Italie"). The second movements of the last-named work are as follows:—a. Sposalizio (Rafael); b. Il Penseroso (Michel Angelo); c. Canzonetta (Salvator Rosa) (Transcription); d. Sonetto (Petrarca) (No. 123); e. Après une Lecture du Dante (Fantasia quasi Sonate); and f. Venezia e Napoli (Gondoliera, Canzone, e Tarantella). These were played in a manner which testified to the unalterable admiration for the composer which Mr. Bache has exhibited for many years past. The present is the eighteenth year of his self-appointed mission, and although a general admiration of Liszt's works is not yet established in England, the high respect for the Englishman who so persistently advocates his claims to consideration is deservedly increasing. On the Continent, both musicians and amateurs are to be found who are willing to acknowledge Liszt's artistic claims, but there are few of either qualification who have done more to urge them upon the notice of his own countrymen than Mr. Walter Bache. Nearly every one of the most important works have been presented to the musical world through his agency or by his hand, and the last endeavour—made upon the anniversary of the birthday of the composer—was not the least interesting of the many he has already made.

JOSEF HOFMANN'S RECITALS.

Young Josef Hofmann's Pianoforte Recitals have not lost any of their powers of attraction, nor has the wonder which his manner of performance excites in any way diminished. His two Concerts at St. James's Hall, on the 10th and 15th ult., were crowded with an audience in which the professional element was not unrepresented. The eagerness to hear the gifted child before the provincial tour which precedes his journey to America was great enough to have warranted a repetition of the two Concerts had there been time to have arranged it. The opportunity is to be deferred, it is rumoured, for a long time; for after the American tour it is said that the boy is to be withdrawn from public life, in order that his growing years may be spent in cultivating and developing the talents with which he is so richly endowed. The surprising nature of his gifts was shown by his performance, at the first Concert, of compositions by Scarlatti, Bach, Handel—Sonata Pastorale, Gigue in G, Suite in E—Beethoven's "Sonata Pathetique," Chopin's Mazurka and Valse, &c., each demanding special powers for their reasonable interpretation. The mechanical facility which the boy possesses was occasionally, however, brought more prominently forward than the artistic perception of the meaning of the music which from time to time was given. Thus Bach's Gigue in G was taken at so swift a rate that it must have been almost unintelligible to those who heard it for the first time. The tolerable accuracy, combined with the rapidity, increased the astonishment of those who knew its difficulties. Still it cannot be said that, from an artistic point of view, it was altogether a reading which would have been satisfactory as coming from any one but Josef Hofmann. The like may be said of the Variations in E, on the theme by Handel usually known as "The harmonious blacksmith." They were cleverly rendered, and elicited much applause. The whole programme, with the exception of a duet by Lysberg, "Don Juan" Fantasia, was played from memory, a task which, in itself, was a matter for wonder in one so young.

The "Moonlight" Sonata was the chief work in the Saturday's programme, and this was given with an absence of effort as though he had never played anything easier all his life. It was an extraordinary performance, wanting nothing but the life and fire which comes of experience. Artistic expression was not always absent from his interpretation of this and of certain pieces by Schumann, "Vogel als prophet"; Chopin, "Nocturne and Valse"; Mendelssohn, "Capriccio," and others. The least satisfactory numbers of the programme were the transcriptions, not so much because of the performance as for the character of the things as music. The child pianist is a prodigy and something more. It rests with those who are now his guardians and advisers to prevent that something more attaining a minus quality in the future.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The first autumn Concert of this institution took place on the 20th ult. in the handsome hall attached to Alexandra House. The room was filled to the doors, and the liveliest interest was taken in the efforts of the young performers, several of whom evinced remarkable ability. That this should be so is not surprising, the scholars being selected for the natural talents they evince in competitive examinations. On the present occasion, the programme consisted of chamber music, the two most important items being Mozart's Quartet in G, which was creditably rendered by Miss Isabella Donkersley and Messrs. Stephenson, Hobday, and Werge; and Beethoven's Quintet in C (Op. 29), a severer test, through which Messrs. Sutcliffe, S. Blagrove, Kreuz, Hobday, and Squire passed very well. The best solo performance was that of some numbers of Schumann's "Kreisleriana," by Miss Marian Osborn. The young lady played not only with mechanical accuracy, but with far more insight into the composer's meaning than one looks for from a student. Mr. Arthur Blagrove showed ability in Chopin's Nocturne in E flat, as arranged for violoncello solo; but is there no legitimate violoncello music that it was necessary to fall back on a transcription of Chopin's hackneyed piece? Miss Beatrice Baxter showed some nervousness in Mendelssohn's air "But the Lord is mindful," though she has the making of a good contralto vocalist.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

If we may judge by the genial character of Sir George Macfarren's annual inaugural address to the students, which was delivered in the Concert-room of the Academy at the commencement of the autumn term, the venerable Principal is himself in possession of excellent health, and is well satisfied with the position of the institution over which he holds sway. He referred in feeling terms to the loss which the Academy had sustained in the death of Mr. Ralph, and acknowledged the donation of £50 towards the Liszt Scholarship given by Signor Buonamici, as the proceeds of a Pianoforte Recital. The Principal's advice to the students, aptly illustrated by anecdote and metaphor, was all admirable, but there is one place where we think he must be incorrectly reported. Speaking of the fact that in the early works of the great masters we observe the influence of their immediate predecessors, Sir G. Macfarren is made to say that "it is not till their later works that those distinctive qualities appear which separate Beethoven from Mozart, and Mozart from Handel." Surely the last-named composer should be Haydn; Mozart in his youth knew nothing of Handel. It appears that the Academy now numbers about 460 scholars, of whom nearly seventy have entered since last term. Obviously, therefore, the Tenterden Street school need have no fear of its younger and vigorous rivals.

The first Chamber Concert of the season took place at St. James's Hall on the 21st ult. Though termed a Chamber Concert, there was a choir of 130 ladies present, and the most important item in the programme was a new Cantata for female voices, entitled "Around the Hearth," by Sir G. A. Macfarren. The libretto, by Mrs. Alexander Roberts, merely deals with the stories and gossip of a fireside party in Wintertide, but it has served as the foundation for some pleasant and thoroughly English music, in which the composer has carefully avoided the extremes of triviality and abstruseness. The work was admirably rendered under Mr. Barnby's direction, the soloists being Miss Ethel Barnard, Miss Ellen Saunders, and Miss Hannah Jones. It is neither possible nor desirable to speak of all the efforts by individual students which followed. Mention may be made of the great facility in pedal work exhibited by Mr. Reginald Steggall in a Fugue in D minor, for organ, by his father, Dr. Steggall; and the promise as a violinist displayed by Master Gerald Walenn in a Romance in G, by Svendsen.

NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Last month I gave a brief reference to the chief choral competition at the National Eisteddfod at Wrexham next year. Some very satisfactory alterations have now been made. The amount of the first prize has been increased from £100 to £150, and it is stipulated that the choirs shall consist of from 150 to 200 voices. The second test piece has been changed, and the selection fixed upon is "Lord, Thy arm" (Spohr's "Fall of Babylon"), which will do duty instead of the "Shepherd's Chorus." In the second choral competition the test pieces have been varied, and among the additions to the programme of which I am apprised are: Juvenile Choir Competition, first prize, £15; second, £5 (forty-five to sixty voices); Orchestral Wood-wind instrumental Solo (piece to be chosen by performer, and not to exceed five minutes in performance), £2; Brass Wind Solo, £2; Welsh Harp Solo Competition, for £2 2s. The adjudicators have not been finally appointed, but they will probably be three in number. A Welshman is one of them; another is the conductor of one of the finest and largest choirs in England, and is in the front ranks of English composers; and the other is a well-known modern English glee writer. The chief choral competition will probably be engaged in by some of the best choirs of North Wales and Yorkshire, and it is hoped that South Wales will be represented by Dowlais, Llanelly, and other distinguished choral associations. The Chairman of the Wrexham Committee is Mr. Evans Morris, J.P.; Hon. Secs., Mr. Simon Jones and Mr. Bayley; Secretary, Mr. W. M. Roberts.

TONIC SOL-FA CONFERENCE AT MERTHYR.

The South Wales Tonic Sol-fa Conference was held at Merthyr-Tydfil on the 24th ult. It has usually taken place at Swansea, but last year it lapsed, and this year the members of the Merthyr section, having first communicated through their Society with Mr. Robert Griffiths, Secretary of the Tonic Sol-fa College, London, and ascertained there was no proposal on foot to take the meetings elsewhere, decided to call the conference in that town. This is not surprising, because the late Rev. J. Roberts, Minister of the Pantywill Methodist Chapel, is regarded as the pioneer of the Sol-fa system in South Wales. It may be stated that the chairman of the committee was Mr. D. Jenkins, Aberystwith, and the vice-chairman, Mr. M. R. Williams, Cefn; Mr. Dan Davies has acted as treasurer, and Mr. D. J. Davies (assisted by Mr. T. Jenkins, Aberdare) carried out the secretarial duties. The attendances were very large. In the morning Mr. Robert Griffiths, Secretary of the Tonic Sol-fa Conference, was called upon to preside. In his remarks he observed that although he had lived in London thirty years he had lost none of his old Welsh fire. He said the Tonic Sol-fa system had made great strides during the last few years. Mr. M. O. Jones, Treherbert, read a paper on "The best means of cultivating and teaching music to children." A discussion followed, in which Mr. W. T. Samuel, teacher of music to Swansea Board Schools; Mr. J. Lloyd, Penydarren; and Mr. Rees, Inspector of Schools, took part. Mr. W. H. Bonner, Licentiate and Member of the Council of the Sol-fa College, gave a very interesting model lesson, entitled "Teaching transition," which he illustrated on the modulator and black board. A discussion took place, and after several complimentary votes of thanks, the business of the morning was brought to a close.

Mr. Lloyd, Penydarren, presided in the afternoon. In the course of his paper on "The importance of voice training for choirs," Mr. D. Jenkins, M.B., Aberystwith, said of late the majority of awards at their large Eisteddfodau had been influenced and governed by the training of the voices, as in other respects the choirs were very nearly equal. He therefore suggested that the distinct quality and colour that belonged to the four parts that constituted a choir should be closely watched. Special effort should be made to get all the voices in one part to produce the same quality of tone. This might be secured by cultivating unity of tone upon each vowel. He also suggested that a series of exercises in gradation of tone, from pp, cres., to ff should form part of every rehearsal, in addition to the pieces to be rehearsed. The latter he had found of great importance with the Choral Society at Aberystwith College, and the difference arising in a very short time was very perceptible. A model lesson was given by Mr. Bonner, in which he illustrated the capabilities of the system by a class of children from the various schools. Discussions again took place. A full rehearsal of choirs was held at Pontmorlais Chapel in the evening, and a meeting, comprising musical selections and addresses, followed. The choir comprised the following sections:—Merthyr, Mr. Tom Price, Conductor; Dowlais, Mr. W. Hughes; Aberdare, Mr. Tom Thomas; Mill Street, Trecynon, Mr. J. Evans; Hirwain, Mr. J. Davies; Swansea, Mr. W. T. Samuel; Morristown, Mr. J. Watkins; Ebbw Vale, Mr. T. Davies; Rhymney, Mr. J. Jones; Pontlottyn, Mr. W. Jones; Treharris, Mr. J. Jones; Gellideg, Mr. J. M. Webber; Cefn Mr. M. R. Williams. Accompanists, Mr. T. Jenkins and Mr. W. Rowlands. The high constable (Mr. Daniel) presided.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The musical season has come upon us with a rush, and entertainments of every kind, classic and popular, vocal and instrumental, sacred and secular, tread so closely upon one another's heels, that music lovers are suffering from quite an embarrassment of riches. Some of the more important Concerts, unfortunately, fell so near the month's end that exigencies of time and space preclude more than the briefest mention of them in the current issue; but there was no lack of interesting material, including two important new works by local composers, among the earlier musical events of October.

Mr. Gaul's "Joan of Arc," which was produced for the first time at the opening Concert of the Festival Choral Society, on the 13th ult., was in the lucky position of having achieved a wide popular success before its production, the reputation of the composer of "The Holy City" having sufficed to create a large demand for his new work, both in this country and in the United States, almost as soon as its publication was announced. The book, which has been furnished by Mr. Frederick Enoch, follows closely the lines of the familiar legend, which has been treated by so many previous composers in cantata, mass, or operatic form, and it will suffice here to indicate the vocal distribution of the principal dramatis personæ, historical or fictitious, viz.: Joan of Arc (soprano), Robert de Baudricourt (Provost of Vaucouleurs) and Jean de Novelonpont (baritones), and Philip, the lover of the Maid of Orleans (tenor). The work comprises eight principal divisions, named after the places where the events occur, and subdivided into eighteen numbers, each complete in itself, and distinguished from the context by cadence and key. The grasp of form and melody evidenced in the composer's earlier works, and especially "The Holy City," is not wanting in "Joan of Arc," but the latter Cantata reveals a wider range and more dramatic spirit than its predecessors. Pastoral charm pervades the work, which in feeling, if not in theme, is here and there suggestive of Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen," and it is in these portions of the work that the composer is most obviously at home. In the more tragic and impassioned situations, his success is less assured, and his orchestration, though always pleasing, and often ingenious and scholarly, is sometimes wanting in colour and graphic power as compared with other works of the modern English school. The principal parts devolved on Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Henry Pope, all of whom acquitted themselves very creditably; whilst the band and chorus, under Mr. Stockley's conductorship, left nothing to be desired. At the close of the Cantata, Mr. Gaul, who was a listener in the great gallery, received a most enthusiastic tribute of applause from the audience. The second part of the Concert was devoted to the first section of Dr. Villiers Stanford's Oratorio "The Three Holy Children," in which Miss Anna Williams sang with fine effect the beautiful soprano solo.

On the 17th ult. Mr. Joseph Short's Concert was signalised by the production of his second Mass (in A major), dedicated to "St. George," which may be pronounced at once a decided advance in breadth and freedom upon its predecessor, "St. Joseph," produced some seven years ago. At the same time it adheres closely to the conventional style suggested by a study of the works of Haydn and Mozart, and appeals to favour rather in virtue of its tunefulness, sound musicianship, and devotional feeling, than by its originality. The performance was a somewhat unequal one owing, in some measure, to the necessity of finding a substitute, at short notice, for Mr. Vernon Rigby, for whom an apology was made. Mr. Edward Badger acquitted himself, under the circumstances, very creditably, and Mr. Grice undertook the bass solos. The vocal powers of the ladies, Madame Helen Trust and Miss Cecilia Short (a daughter of the composer), were scarcely equal to the requirements of so large a hall, but the band and chorus, numbering about 300 performers, acquitted themselves very fairly. Mr. Short's "Ave Maria" was interpolated as an offertorium. The performance altogether was very well received, and at the conclusion of the Mass the composer received a hearty tribute of applause. The second part of the Concert was devoted to a miscellaneous selection.

The void created by the abandonment of the Saturday Concerts of the Musical Association has been filled to some extent by a series of Saturday evening Concerts, at popular prices, arranged by Mr. A. W. Gilmer, a popular local cornet player and bandmaster. At the first of these entertainments, on the 8th ult., there was a large and enthusiastic audience. Mr. Gilmer's military band of thirty performers especially distinguished themselves in a selection from Ponchielli's opera "La Gioconda," Weber's "Oberon" Overture, and Meyerbeer's "Schiller" March, the latter with organ accompaniment by Mr. W. G. Halliley. The vocalists were Miss Bertha Moore and Mr. C. W. Fredericks, whose efforts appeared to give considerable satisfaction, whilst Mr. J. Wills won great applause for his cornet playing. At the second Concert of the series, the vocalists were Miss Lilian Mills and Mr. Robert Grice, of St. Paul's Cathedral.

On the evening of the 6th ult. the Birmingham Musical Guild, a professional body which has hitherto confined itself mainly to mutual entertainment and instruction within the limits of its own body, initiated a new and important departure by bringing forward Mr. E. Prout as a public lecturer on "Musical Form." Mr. Prout took as the basis of his exposition, Beethoven's Sonata Pastorale in D major (Op. 28), playing portions of each of the four movements in illustration of his remarks, and pointing out the most noteworthy differences of form between this and other sonatas by the same and other famous masters. The lecture was listened to with great interest by a fairly large audience, including members of the public as well as professional musicians, and a formal vote of thanks was given to the lecturer on its conclusion. At a previous meeting of the Guild, held on the 1st ult., Mr. S. S. Stratton was unanimously elected President in succession to Mr. Sutton, and after the formal business was concluded, an interesting vocal and instrumental Concert was given by the members and friends of the Society. The only novelty produced was a MS. Trio for pianoforte and strings, by Mr. Breakspeare, of which two movements were played, and received with hearty applause.

Mr. W. Moore's Cantata "Torfrida," was performed for the second time by the members of the Midland Musical Society, on the 1st ult. Miss Frazer Brunner, Mr. W. F. Evans, and Mr. Stilliard took the leading parts.

The annual Scholars' Festival in connection with the Birmingham Sunday School Union, was held in the Town Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. A. R. Gaul, with Mr. W. Astley Langston at the organ. Connected with the Union are now seventy schools, representing some 35,000 scholars, of which 5,000 or 6,000 are adults. The number of teachers in the Union is about 2,000. An interesting performance took place on the evening of the 6th ult., when the programme comprised choruses, vocal marches, and part-songs, and an excerpt from Haydn's "Seasons," in which some 600 voices took part. An interesting lecture on the subject of Haydn's work was given by Mr. S. Usher, with limelight illustrations.

Comic operetta evidently maintains its place in the favour of the local public, and there is rarely cause to complain of the attendance where this form of entertainment is given. Several novelties have lately been produced here with very satisfactory results. "Robert Macaire," by Mr. Geo. Fox, the composer of "The Jackdaw of Rheims," was heard for the first time in Birmingham at the Grand Theatre, on September 27; but as it had been previously heard at the Crystal Palace, it would be superfluous to review it here. Mr. Fox himself, as the reckless cut-throat hero, contributes in an important measure to the success of the performance, and the other leading parts found competent exponents in Mdlle. Bauermeister, Madame Lucy Franklein, Mr. Herbert Sims Reeves, and Mr. George Marler.

On the 10th ult. "The Old Guard," by M. R. Planquette, words by Mr. H. B. Farnie, was performed here for the first time on any stage, prior to its introduction to the London public at the Avenue Theatre. The plot, though somewhat trite, is not uninteresting. The Emperor Napoleon I. has ordered the Marquis d'Artemare to marry his daughter Murielle to the plebeian Captain Marcel, an officer of the Old Guard; but the Marquis has other views for his daughter, in place of whom he attempts to palm off upon the Captain a village maiden named Fraisette. It subsequently transpires that Fraisette and Murielle have been changed at birth, whence ludicrous complications arise; but in the end everything works out happily. Fraisette's lover turns out to be a disguised aristocrat, and Murielle finds in the Captain an old admirer, who once rescued her from the hands of brigands. The music is melodious and sparkling, if not strikingly original, and the characters and situations are many of them extremely whimsical and mirth provoking. It is unnecessary to add that the piece is staged in the most sumptuous manner. The musical honours were carried off by Miss Marian Edgcumbe and Mr. Wilford Morgan.

On the evening of the 25th ult. Messrs. Harrison gave the first of a series of four Subscription Concerts to a crowded and fashionable audience, whose appreciation of the leading features of the entertainment was, as usual, very warmly expressed. The honours of the evening were fairly divided between Madame Albani and Josef Hofmann, the boy pianist, both of whom were in excellent form. Madame Adelina Patti is announced to appear at the next of these Concerts, on December 1, and the last Concert of the series, following old precedent, will be supported by Mr. Charles Hallé and his celebrated band.

At Mr. Stockley's first Orchestral Concert, on the 27th ult., the vocalists were Madame Georgina Burns and Mr. Leslie Crotty, and the instrumental works included Dr. C. Villiers Stanford's new Irish Symphony, conducted by himself. Particulars of the performance must be reserved for my next.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The musical season is well under way here, and by the middle of this month the Liverpool public will have forgotten the late musical drought, and will be eagerly drinking in the strains of works, old and new, with stimulating and refreshing effect. The Philharmonic Society has already given two of the twelve annual Subscription Concerts, the dates being the 4th and the 18th ult. The following programme was down for performance on the 4th:—Overture, "Euryanthe" (Weber); Madrigal, "The Triumph of Victoria" (Stainer); Concerto Violin, "Concerto Dramatico in Modo di Scena Cantante" (Spohr); Air, "Voi che sapete" (Mozart); Beethoven's No. 5 Symphony, in C minor; Overture, "Hans Heiling" (Marschner); Air, "Bel raggio" (Rossini); Chorus of Shepherds, "Forth to the meadows" (Schubert); Soli Violin (a), Adagio in E (Mozart); (b) Prelude in E (Bach); Canzonet, "My mother bids me bind my hair" (Haydn); Polonaise, with chorus, from Glinka's opera "Life for the Czar." Beginning with the chief work of importance, the Beethoven Symphony, it is a matter of some regret to have to state that the orchestra, which has undergone some slight changes since last season, did not perform this truly noble work with the perfection that has hitherto distinguished this fine combination of players. In several places a weakness in the strings, notably the first violins, was noticeable, as also a slight harshness in the brass. In the second movement, however, the Andante in A flat, the beautiful delicacy of tone in the dreamy melody at the opening of the movement could scarcely have been surpassed, the violas being specially good. Madame Norman-Néruda received a well merited ovation at the conclusion of the Spohr Concerto. Whether in the broad declamatory strains of the recitative or in the vocal melody of the cavatina, the performer was, as usual, fully at home. Great delicacy of touch marked the rendering of the soli by Madame Néruda in the second part of the programme, and it is a matter of sincere pleasure to have to record this lady's stout resistance to the demands for an "encore." Would that others would persistently follow her good example! Miss Trebelli, as the solo vocalist, was not heard to such advantage as on her previous visits to this city, as she was evidently suffering from a cold. Her singing of the Haydn canzonet, however, was marked with rare pathos, which compensated in a great measure for the disappointment felt at her two previous essays. The chorus has been considerably strengthened this season; the basses are about as fine a body of singers as could be got together. Mr. Charles Hallé conducted with his customary ability, and Mr. Branscombe, the chorus-master, accompanied.

For the second Concert, on the 18th, the following items were down for performance:—Overtures, "Les Abencerrages" and "Guillaume Tell"; Symphony, "A Rustic Wedding," for orchestra; Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, and the following soli piano—(a) Nocturne;

(b) Valse (Chopin); (c) Romance (Rubinstein); (d) Mazurka; (e) Valse (Josef Hofmann), by the last-named. Vocal soli—"Ah! perfido," Romance from "Mignon," and two ballads by Brahms, by Miss Pauline Cramer. The chorus rendered Purcell's Madrigal, "In these delightful pleasant groves," "Vintage Song," for men's voices, from Mendelssohn's "Loreley," and "Hail! bright abode," from Wagner's "Tannhäuser." The hall was crowded to excess in order to hear little Hofmann, whose first appearance it was here. A more remarkable performance has rarely, if ever, taken place in Liverpool than the playing of this truly phenomenal child. In the most exacting parts of the Beethoven Concerto, and in the intricacies of the Chopin morceaux, the facile execution and true intonation displayed were astonishing to all. Seldom has an ovation such as this little boy received at the conclusion of his evening's work been accorded to any "star" in Liverpool, the vast audience cheering for many minutes. Even the most captious critic could not find fault with the orchestra on this occasion, the rendering of Goldmark's-ever welcome "Rustic Wedding" being irreproachable, and well nigh unapproachable. The playing of the tender and sentimental fourth movement, "In the garden," will long be remembered. The "Vintage Song" was given by the gentlemen of the chorus with great dash and verve, eliciting a recall, whch was not responded to.

At the next Concert of the series, on the 8th inst., Sir Arthur Sullivan will personally conduct his "Golden Legend"; the committee have also invited Mr. Villiers Stanford to conduct his "Revenge" on the same occasion.

It is most pleasing to have to notify that that admirable body of choristers, composing the Liverpool Philharmonic Choral Society, intend giving another series of Concerts this season, contrary to what was painfully anticipated. The dates and works have not yet been fixed upon.

A new comic opera, entitled "The Old Guard," by Planquette, was produced, for the first time in Liverpool and the second time in England, at the Royal Court Theatre, on Monday, the 17th ult., before a critical and crowded audience. It is in the usual three acts, and though most of the music is bright and tuneful, it will certainly not live on the English stage like its most popular predecessor, "Les Cloches de Corneville." The opera was well mounted, and has since continued to attract large audiences.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The colder and damper weather of October brought back the lovers of music from the gardens and airy concert rooms, where during the warm summer they, with unusual freedom from anxiety about rheumatic consequences, revelled in combined enjoyment of ear and eye. As the year decays we settle down to that more serious study of art which seems to require concentration of thought, and certainly needs moderate comfort, warmth, and freedom from draughts. Thus, the denizens of the Concert Hall flocked gratefully to the well-upholstered room where, on the afternoons of the 3rd and 17th ult., Mr. Hallé gave the two Pianoforte Recitals which may be said to have inaugurated our winter season. Established in their accustomed places, they listened attentively to the well-known pieces executed with the old irreproachable delicacy and clearness, and appealing to them with friendly familiarity. Weber's Sonata in A flat enjoyed the post of honour in Mr. Hallé's first selection, as his Overtures so frequently do in our orchestral programmes; its brilliancy and variety covering whatever patchiness of construction may blemish it, and serving to lead on to the more composed and sedate Fugues of Bach and the Beethoven Sonata in E flat (Op. 81). For the second Recital Mr. Hallé selected the Sonata (Op. 7) of Beethoven, also in E flat, with the Humoresken of Grieg, and small works by Schumann, Chopin, and Rameau. For the 13th inst. a Chamber Concert is announced, at which Madame Néruda and Messrs. Straus, Risegari, and Franz Néruda will join Mr. Hallé.

On the 12th ult. the Manchester Vocal Society gave a miscellaneous selection of secular music. Dr. Watson works hard on behalf of his choir, and takes at its public performances more immediate and direct control than formerly was the rule. The effect is satisfactory and encouraging, inasmuch as greater unity of purpose is attained.

The Misses Bristowe gave, on the 25th ult., a very pleasant Concert, of a pattern much to be commended. Miss Fanny Bristowe is well known as a promising soprano, and Miss Lucy is a pianist of considerable skill and discrimination. With the aid of Messrs. Otto Bernhardt and Vieuxtemps, she gave a very intelligent rendering of Mendelssohn's Trio (Op. 49) and Schumann's Phantasiestücke; and Mr. Seymour Jackson distinctly advanced his position by his delivery of Beethoven's "Adelaide."

For the first of his Subscription Concerts, on the last Thursday of October, Mr. Hallé promises Madame Nordica, in the "Queen of the Night" air from "Zauberflöte," and other songs; and to display the quality of his band in the "Oberon" Overture, the Fourth Symphony of Schumann, and in the "Isolda's Liebestod," from "Tristan."

Mr. de Jong will not commence operations at the Free Trade Hall until the Saturday following the close of the Exhibition—the 12th inst.—when the band, formed for that successful speculation, will give a final performance previous to its breaking up.

Mr. Ferneley intends again to undertake his Orchestral Concerts on alternate Mondays, beginning on the 14th inst., and Mr. Cross will ambitiously essay "Israel in Egypt" at the first assembly of his numerous admirers.

Madame Patti promises to visit us on the 18th inst. with some able coadjutors.

We have just had a twelve nights' season of the Carl Rosa Company. No novelties have been produced, nor have any of the more important works written for the corps been given. Of English operas only "The Bohemian Girl," "Maritana," and "Nordisa" have been vouchsafed. I believe a great error has thus been made. If the company is to enjoy the success which grew so rapidly under the vigorous management of its founder, its chief claim must be derived from a persevering and adequate presentation of the works of native composers; and in this district, at least, the directors may rest assured of the safety of a spirited policy. Apart from the original claim of the company as an English undertaking, it is interesting to note that the oft-repeated works even of foreign schools have proved less attractive than those which, having had a little rest, have now some slight freshness of effect. As a whole, the performances have been good. Changes have been made among the principal artists; but a fair average of merit is retained; and both band and chorus have been efficient, and as strong as could be looked for.

The music during the last month at the Exhibition has been much as usual. Mr. Pyne's Organ Recitals have been given daily, and fully appreciated. Specially, however, must be mentioned the achievements of the band of the Royal Artillery. Alike in the gardens and in the orchestral performances in the Concert-room, the programmes, and their rendering, have been most attractive. The success and great popularity of the symphonic performances have been extremely gratifying, and have afforded strong evidence of the mistake made by the committee which undertook the management of the lighting, feeding, and amusing of the more than four millions of visitors. The applause meted out to all the music given at the Exhibition has shown even the mere pleasure-seekers among the listeners to be possessed of very great power of discrimination. But the eagerness with which the quieter concert-room interpretations have been followed shows that an altogether higher tone might have been struck without in any way endangering the receipts. Even the tricky eccentricities of the so-called "Hungarian band" have had crowds of attentive listeners tired of military bands and their monotony of tone and style; but the finished performance of the Royal Artillery concert-room orchestra excited a keen interest and a regret that the whole of the music of the season had not been more boldly undertaken, and with a determination to bring it—as an educational force upon the great mass of visitors—to a level with the other surrounding influences. The instruction afforded by the pictures, by the machinery, by the chemical and other special sections, could scarcely be over-rated.

Why was music alone degraded to becoming, for the most part, a mere relaxation for promenaders, a comparison of one brass band with another in the performance of operatic selections?

For the closing day, the 10th inst., Mr. Hallé's band and choir have been engaged, as well as Miss Anna Williams, Madame Trebelli, and Mr. Sims Reeves. A very commonplace selection is announced, with the expression of the wish of the committee that the musical function "shall be worthy of the occasion," and a confidence that the public will deem it so.

MUSIC IN THE WEST.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Bristol Musical Association opened last month's campaign by giving their first Concert for the season on the 1st ult. The programme was miscellaneous, and does not call for special remark; but we may notice the increasingly crowded attendances as a sure evidence that these entertainments well deserve their name of "Saturday Popular Concerts." On the evening in question hundreds went away disappointed, being unable to obtain seats. Miss Marion Evans, the youthful prize soprano at the late Eisteddfod, and Miss Lucy Clarke, the prize contralto at the same gathering, were the chief lady vocalists, and to each was accorded a hearty reception. The other soloists were Miss Mary George (harp), Mr. George Riseley (organ), while Mr. Lawford Huxtable showed himself to be in excellent voice and was as popular as ever. Mr. George Gordon conducted as usual.

The following week the Prince's Theatre was occupied by the Carl Rosa Opera Company, who gave successively "Carmen," "Nordisa," "Trovatore," "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Masaniello," "Galatea," and a morning performance of "The Bohemian Girl."

On the 8th ult., by the enterprise of Messrs. Duck, Son and Pinker, we had the opportunity of attending an excellent Ballad Concert, for which the following distinguished artists were engaged:—Miss Mary Davies, Madame Patey, Mr. Sidney Tower, Mr. Frederick Bevan, Herr Poznanski (solo violin), Signor Tito Mattei (solo pianist and Conductor).

On the 18th ult. Mr. F. Liebich, a pupil of Dr. Hans von Bülow, gave a Pianoforte Recital at the Victoria Rooms, before a moderately large audience. Mr. Liebich has lately come to reside amongst us, and has on several occasions given evidence of his power and ability as a pianist. He selected his programme from the works of Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann, Raff, and Rubinstein, playing throughout from memory. The "Waldstein" Sonata of Beethoven was the first item, and its performance elicited hearty applause. Mr. T. Carrington was the violinist, and contributed two violin solos with his accustomed skill, and was associated with Mr. Liebich in Brahms's Sonata in A for piano and violin. This is the second public Recital given by Mr. Liebich in Clifton, and he may be said to have established his position with us as a pianist.

A meeting of the South Midland Section of the Society of Professional Musicians was held at the Imperial Hotel, Clifton, on the 14th ult., when Dr. Hiles read an interesting paper on the subject "Are we making Musicians?"

We now come to the Festival Society's Concerts given at Colston Hall, on the 21st and 22nd ult. Dvorák's great work "The Spectre's Bride" was the chief interest of the first Concert, and was performed before a well filled room. It is the second public performance of the Cantata in Bristol, the first being that given in May last year by Mr. Riseley's choir and band and under his conductorship. With regard to the solos, it is sufficient to say that they were sung by Miss Annie Marriott, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley. We cannot notice in detail the work of the chorus, but must be content with a few words as to general effect. The choir numbered over 300, and seemed very well balanced, and in all parts where spirit and energy were required the effect was extremely good, and it was wanting only in delicate or staccato passages, particularly those in Nos. 11, 16, and 18. The voices do not always agree as to the exact moment of ceasing, and the result is a want of crispness. Frequently the "attack" is only partial, owing to the number of timid singers among the good. There is, however, no carelessness or lack of zeal, and no sparing of vocal energy, and we feel sure that nothing in choral singing need be impossible to them. In the second part of the programme, which was miscellaneous, the ladies of the choir greatly distinguished themselves by their singing of the "Spinning Chorus" from "The Flying Dutchman," leaving really nothing to be desired. Mr. Hallé's band contributed Mozart's Overture "Die Zauberflöte," and the Introduction to Act 3, "Die Meistersinger," followed by the "Walkurenritt" (Wagner), all as wonderfully played as usual, the last-named being even more dramatically rendered than we remember before, and evoking an enthusiastic encore, which was kindly responded to by Mr. Hallé. Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Hallé's band united in presenting an absolutely perfect rendering of Gounod's new song "The Holy Vision," which produced a profound impression on the audience, and later on in the evening Mr. Santley enchanted his hearers with his inimitable singing of "The Vicar of Bray," the piano accompaniment being played by Mr. D. W. Rootham. The March and Chorus, "Twine ye the garlands," from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," brought the Concert to a close.

On Saturday afternoon, the 22nd ult., Stanford's Choral Ballad "The Revenge" and Sullivan's "Golden Legend" were given. Obviously this was pre-eminently the popular performance, for not a vacant seat was to be seen in the whole building. The performance of "The Revenge" (which was once before given in Bristol at one of the Saturday Popular Concerts) was a little lacking in spirit. Great interest centred on the production of "The Golden Legend," and it was listened to throughout with breathless attention. The choir worked well and heartily, and they deserve unqualified praise for their beautiful singing of the chorals, notably the unaccompanied one "O gladsome light." Every word was quite distinct, the balance and pitch was maintained throughout, and the whole was a specimen of refined and cultivated choral singing. The solos were undertaken by Madame Albani, Miss Winant, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, who were all as a matter of course successful. Miss Winant's singing was thoroughly artistic; Mr. Lloyd made an excellent Prince Henry, and was in splendid voice, while Mr. Santley gave a delightful rendering of the part of Lucifer. The band played excellently, and the work was extremely favourably received, and will, we hope, be heard again in our city ere long. We must, in conclusion, offer a word of congratulation to Mr. Rootham, whose efforts in the cause of music are steady and unremitting.

The more interesting events of the Cheltenham Festival occurred too late for notice this month; reference to the whole subject is therefore deferred.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Glasgow Choral Union have now completed their arrangements for the forthcoming season. The series will be two weeks shorter in duration than of late years, but in view of the probable superabundance of musical entertainment during the winter and spring, through the Exhibition and otherwise, that circumstance is not so much to be regretted. There will be three choral and seven orchestral Concerts, and, as formerly, popular Concerts, so-called, will take place on Saturday evenings during the season. The choral works are to be, as I have already stated, "The Messiah," "Elijah," and Berlioz's "Faust," in which connection it may be mentioned that the choral performances will be conducted by Mr. Joseph Bradley, the newly appointed chorus-trainer of the Society. Engagements have been made with several eminent vocal and instrumental artists. Among the former are Madame Nordica, Miss Mary Davies, Miss Elly Warnots, Madame Patey, Messrs. Iver McKay, Henry Piercy, F. King, Bantock-Pierpont, and Watkin Mills; while among the latter, the instrumentalists, are Messrs. Franz Rummel and Bernard Stavenhagen, pianists; and Franz Ondricek and Fernandez Arbos, violinists, the last-named artist being likewise leading violin in the orchestra for the season.

The particulars of the orchestral programmes will not be issued for a short while yet, but from what I can learn it is intended to make the selections from approved compositions of the past rather than from the novelties of the present. Only where there is a certainty of excellence and of popular acceptance will novelties find a place. But for patriotic reasons, no doubt, Mr. Hamish McCunn's Overture "The Land of the Mountain and Flood" will very probably be included among the present-day compositions to be performed.

A new Society has been formed in what we may call the transpontine part of Glasgow, with the title "South Western," and Handel's "Samson" is to be the first subject of study. Mr. J. Conner is the Conductor.

The Pollokshields Society have selected Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," Mr. W. T. Hoeck being Conductor as formerly. The Partick Society take up "The Norman Baron," of Anderton, and the choir of St. Vincent Street United Presbyterian Church, a new Cantata by Mr. W. H. Dixon, of Kilmarnock, entitled "Jerusalem," a work of considerable merit. Mr. Hugh McNabb is the Conductor.

About twenty years ago there was in existence in Glasgow, a Choral Association called the "St. Cecilia." It drew its membership almost exclusively from the more wealthy classes, and was of quite a private character. Allowed to drop out of existence, the Society has now been revived, at least in name, and gives every promise of a vigorous new life. A number of the prominent members of the old "St. Cecilia" have given their countenance to the new association, among others, Mr. James Campbell, of Tullichewan, who has done so much for high-class music in the West of Scotland, and there is already a large and efficient number of choralists on the roll. The Conductor is Mr. Hugh McNabb, and the chief work to be practised is Macfarren's "Lady of the Lake."

The cultivation of youthful voices continues to make progress in this portion of the northern realm, and one of the chief factors in the attainment of the result aimed at is the Southern Boys' Choir, which usually has about one hundred juveniles on its roll of membership. Besides the practice of secular and sacred part-music, larger works are usually studied, and this year Fox's setting of "The Jackdaw of Rheims" has been selected. In Scotland we are slow to use the voices of boys in church, but we are, nevertheless, advancing in that direction, thanks to the examples of juvenile singing in this and other choirs of the kind.

A new Society has been formed in Greenock, under the title of the Greenock Choral Union, with the intention of concentrating the musical talent of that busy community on the seaward part of the Clyde, to some better musical purpose than hitherto under several smaller organisations. The conductorship has been entrusted to the able and experienced hands of Mr. W. T. Hoeck, and Gounod's great sacred work "The Redemption" is to be the principal subject of study, with a view to performance with orchestra and trained principals early next year.

At Kilmalcolm, a residential place about midway between Glasgow and Greenock, and favoured by business people in both places, there are three musical associations. One is the Kilmalcolm Choral Society, under Mr. Paterson Cross, which will take up this season "Judas Maccabæus"; the second, that in connection with the Established Church, under Mr. J. C. Fyfe, which has fixed on Dr. Henry Hiles's Cantata "The Crusaders"; and the third, the Society connected with the United Presbyterian Church, which has chosen Gaul's "Holy City."

The Dumbarton Choral Union have chosen Handel's "Samson," Mr. J. Mitchell being the Conductor.

The Ayr Choral Union have selected Handel's "Messiah" for their Christmas Concert, and Mendelssohn's "Elijah" for performance at the end of the season. At Girvan, some twenty miles farther South, the Musical Society there will practise Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter," both these Choirs being under the training of Mr. McNabb.

At the invitation of the Glasgow Art Club, Mr. W. A. Barrett delivered a most interesting lecture in the Club-room, on the 4th ult., on "English glees," the musical illustrations having been given by a party of the best amateur choralists in Glasgow and neighbourhood. The result of the impression made by Mr. Barrett's warm appeal for a revival of the practice of that delightful form of composition is, for one thing, the formation of a Glee and Madrigal Club of about twenty select voices.

Mr. Barrett and Mr. W. G. McNaught were entertained, on the last night of September, by the Glasgow Society of Musicians, and Mr. Charles Hallé received the like attention on the 14th ult.

Mr. Hallé and Madame Norman-Néruda had a large audience on the last-mentioned date, in the Queen's Rooms, and Master Josef Hofmann, the child pianist, played to an overflowing assemblage in the same place on the 21st ult.

MUSIC IN SOUTH WALES.

(From our own Correspondent.)

There has been a musical re-awakening in most of the large towns of the several counties. Opera at Cardiff and Concerts in various centres have contributed to this. I hope the season will be attended with good results, musically and financially.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company have greatly edified the Cardiff public at the Theatre Royal, and their performances of several operas have been appreciated by audiences more or less numerous.

The Cardiff Orchestral Society project several high-class Concerts. The first will be held on the 2nd inst. at the Park Hall, and another will take place on December 28, on which occasion Madame Patey and Mr. Lucas Williams will appear. Early next year Madame Hilda Wilson and Signor Foli are to pay us a visit. Madame Georgina Burns and Mr. James Sauvage are to sing at the first Concert.

The first Concert of the season, at Andrew's Hall, Penarth, was not largely attended. The vocalists were Miss Lucy Clarke, Mr. Tom Price, Miss Holt, Mr. C. Emlyn, Mr. Jones, and Mr. Muskett. Some instrumental selections, in which Mr. C. Draper, Mr. Joseph G. Deacon, and Master Muskett took part, were given.

The Philharmonic Society at Newport held their first Recital this season on the 3rd ult. They have decided to give the Oratorio "St. Paul," and the Mayor (Mr. Hoskings) has promised to pay for the hire of the hall in which the practices will be held.

The Saturday Popular Concerts have been very well attended during two past seasons at Swansea. This season's programme was inaugurated in the Drill Hall in that town on the 1st ult. Mr. Yeo, M.P. (the Mayor), presided, and expressed a hope that the Concerts would continue to be successful, and that they would be the means of good to the working classes, who on Saturday nights might beneficially be provided with cheap and rational music. Popular Concerts, promoted by Mr. Dodd, have also been instituted at Cardiff. Mr. Aynsley Cook, a member of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, rendered excellent service at the Concert held on the 1st ult., on which occasion Mr. T. E. Aylward gave two organ solos, and other items were furnished by the Cremona Musical Union. Miss Maggie Jones Morewood, Mr. Alfred Lord (Hereford Cathedral), and Mr. Arthur Castings were the chief vocalists at the Concert on the 15th ult. Mr. Aylward presided at the organ, and Mr. Arthur Angle gave great satisfaction as a violinist. Mr. Aylward, Organist of the Park Hall, is also giving a series of Recitals, which promise to be successful. I may add that Mr. Dodd has organised Monday Popular Concerts at Bristol.

Chamber Music Concerts are not yet old in Cardiff. They were introduced two seasons since in connection with the University College, and they are continued, although the attendances of the public are not so large as might have been hoped. On the 12th ult. there was an admirable programme, in which Miss Eleanor Rees, a very great favourite, rendered "Tre Giorni" (Pergolesi), "Light in Darkness" (Cowen), and a Lullaby, by Brahms. Mrs. Roskell, of Penarth, was her accompanist, and also gave much satisfaction as a pianist in other parts of the programme. Mr. Joseph Ludwig created a great impression as an able exponent of violin music. As a violoncellist, Mr. W. E. Whitehouse also met with a very hearty reception. A Trio in B flat, Op. 99 (Schubert), and a Trio in A minor, Op. 29 (Gade), were well rendered by Professor Templeton (pianoforte), Mr. Ludwig, and Mr. Whitehouse.

A Concert was organised by Mr. Frost at the Park Hall on the 5th ult. The vocalists were Mr. James Sauvage, a member of the Carl Rosa Company; Madame Lizzie Williams, and Eos Morlais. The Blue Ribbon Choir, led by Mr. Jacob Davies, sang several selections. Mr. Frost played a harp solo. Mrs. Frost and Miss C. N. Davies rendered good service as pianoforte accompanists.

In aid of the Carmarthenshire Infirmary Fund, an Eisteddfod was held at Kidwelly, on the 1st ult. Mr. Daniel Stephens presided, and the atttendance was large. The Conductor was Mr. Richard Randell, and the adjudicator Mr. D. Howells, Pontypridd. The chief choral prize offered for the best rendering of "Datod mae rhwymau Caethiwed" was awarded to the Sea View Choral Union, Pwll (Mr. Jos. Hughes, Conductor). Three other choirs were in the competition. The prize for the best rendering of a hymn tune was taken by the Llanelly (Dock) United Choir. Horeb Choir (Mr. W. Phillips) took the prize offered for glee singing. A series of vocal solo competitions also took place.

The sixth annual Choir Eisteddfod at Tredegar, on the 17th ult., was presided over by Mr. W. Holmes, mill manager at the steel works. The Conductor was Mr. T. L. Davies, and the musical adjudicator, Dr. Parry, of Swansea. Miss Mita Scott, Merthyr, was the accompanist. Mr. William Phillips, Abercarn, won the bass solo prize. "Then round about the starry throne" was the test piece in the chief choral competition between choirs of over eighty voices, for a prize of £20 and a gold medal. The following choirs competed:—Beaufort Choral Union (J. Gullion), Tredegar (D. H. Thomas), Rhymney (Mr. Conway), Ebbw Vale (T. Dowton). The Rhymney choir took the honours. Only two choirs sang in the competition for congregational choirs, "In the deep and mighty waters" (Dr. Parry), and the prize, £3 and a silver medal, was awarded to Saron, Ebbw Vale. A Concert followed in the evening.

An Eisteddfod also took place on the 17th ult. at Bargoed, in the Rhymney Valley, Mr. Alfred Thomas, M.P., presiding.

It is intimated by Head Constable Hemingway, that the Annual Concert of the Borough Police Band will be given at the end of this month, at the Park Hall.

Mr. Walter Scott's choir—the Cardiff Musical Association—gave their promised performance of the Oratorio "Elijah," at the Park Hall, Cardiff, on the 19th ult. The attendance was comparatively meagre. Concerts of the cheap and popular order, and other musical events, had probably deprived many Cardiffians of their spare cash; but those who did attend were compensated for the trouble they had taken by what they heard. The principal vocalists were: Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Harrison Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Brereton (bass). The orchestra was furnished by the Cardiff Orchestral Society, and a number of musicians from Birmingham, Bristol, and other places.

Dowlais, which ought to have been represented at the National Eisteddfod in the Albert Hall, is now making some effort to establish a Glee and Madrigal Society.

MUSIC IN DRESDEN.

(From our own Correspondent.)

About four-and-twenty years ago a Saxon Count, whose sensibility would be shocked were he ever to read his name in print, appealed to Rubinstein on behalf of a young Jew, needy, but highly gifted, and earning a scanty living by copying music. The result was that, through the generosity of the composer, the struggling genius was enabled to develop his latent powers, and finally to produce two lyrical works which never fail to draw a closely packed audience in more than one large German town, especially in those of Saxony. The young man's name was Carl Goldmark. It would be too exacting to call upon a writer of modern opera to ignore all the improvements of a powerful predecessor, for the mere purpose of avoiding a charge of plagiarism; and Goldmark requires the full benefit of this license; for no doubt his light, around which the Dresdeners so love to hover, is to a great extent a borrowed one, and his admirers are paying an unconscious tribute to the hero of Bayreuth when they crowd to hear "The Queen of Sheba" and "Merlin"; but there is a sufficient residuum of power and originality to make those works a feature of the day. Of sustained melody there is little; of form, musically speaking, there is none. To the eye his workmanship, judged by the light of the vocal score, appears to involve gratuitous complications of harmony, and inconsequential progressions without beginning or end; but one or two hearings carry home to the hearer the truth that, handled by a real master, the orchestra and chorus may supply the place of almost everything else, and sustain the interest of the audience during four acts. This is more pointedly the case with "Sheba"; in "Merlin" there are short snatches of rare beauty, independent of instrumental colouring. One Leitmotiv, in the key of D flat, given out in the first instance by the full band, and subsequently re-appearing on the wood and strings alternately, arrests the attention and haunts the ear of a musician for days. The libretto of the first-mentioned work is not unknown to persons out of Germany who interest themselves in such matters. "Merlin" is more recent and unfamiliar. It cannot be recommended as a model to authors of operatic libretti, but would be invaluable to worn-out writers of Christmas extravaganzas. The soothsayer and magician is exerting his power to promote the success of Arthur, King of Britain, in a campaign with foes of unascertained identity. As far as the libretto goes, a rebellious "dämon," chafing under Merlin's sway, consults the fairy Morgana, who recommends him to adopt the orthodox mode of silencing the enchanter's harp and with it annihilating his power—viz., the seductive power of woman. It might have been imagined that a dämon of ordinary capacity and acquirements would have arrived at this conclusion without supplemental assistance from the world of spirits, "nec Deus intersit," but it is perhaps only just to impute to Herr Goldmark's puppets ignorance both of Horace and of Christmas fairy pieces. The introduction of an amazon, Viviana, a tableau of Herr Gudehus, with a "practicable" fiery chain encircling his arms and just visible to the audience, and also, indeed, to King Arthur and his staff, who are in danger of defeat; with the prayers of the latter that Merlin may be restored to them, prayers of which the dämon, with more prescience than one would have ascribed to him, brings about the realisation in order that Merlin may meet his death in fight—all follow in bewildering succession. The rapid transition from a rugged scene, with Merlin chained to a rock, to the brilliant battle-field, was a triumph of scenic effect, but belongs to the domain of féerie rather than opera. That the composer has given life and interest to such undignified subject-matter reminds one of the "Flauto Magico," "Oberon," and (to compare small things with great) of the fascinating "Satanella" of Balfe. Herr Goldmark soars above his libretto, but his music is not to be thought on that account wanting in picturesque delineation of character and situation. Witness the phrases in which the wayward Viviana lures Merlin to his ruin: these, though rather over-scored, stand out in strong contrast to the stately periods allotted to Arthur. The title part has less of individuality in it than the other two, but this is not the fault of the composer. It is to be regretted that a vocal score is incapable of reproducing, unless by way of souvenir, the original intentions of Herr Goldmark. But this is of the less importance to the Dresdeners, as Herr Stahl, the able conductor of a series of Concerts recently commenced at the Gewerbehaus, has brought home to the general public, by well chosen selections, passages from the works of Goldmark, Kretschmer, and Wagner, which detached hearings at the theatre do not suffice to render intelligible. An excerpt which is frequently so given is a valse movement in B flat, occurring in "Merlin," as part of the water-sprites' music. The undulating character of this number—as it would be called but for the absence of numerical division—is so fascinating that amateurs will be thankful to learn that a workable arrangement by a well-known pianist is published at Ries's warehouse, in the Lee Strasse. It is the only portion of the opera separable from the orchestra and stage business. Fräulein Malten, in the part of Viviana, shows a voice unimpaired by the stern ordeal to which for nearly twelve years she has been subjected as the leading exponent of the Wagner school.

Whether as the womanly Elsa, the stately Queen of Sheba, or the ingénue in the "Meistersinger," she is equally at home; nothing can be fresher than her maidenly confusion on receiving a bouquet from Walther in the last-mentioned work. Her ignorance of the world in general, and men in particular, seems actually to increase with her years; one can hardly imagine what her artlessness will be at the age of sixty.

The Gewerbehaus Concerts above alluded to are interesting, as not having an exact parallel in England. The price of admission is 7½d. The orchestra consists of forty-six performers, including eight first violins. A fair type of the music played is found in a recent programme, which comprised, among other things, Overtures by Spohr, Wagner, and Suppé, excerpts from Gounod's "Sheba," and an opera, by Kretschmer, part of a chamber composition of Mozart, and a bright march by the Conductor. All the composers were of German origin, except in the case of a valse, which was by an English composer. These Concerts occur three times weekly, and are rarely otherwise than well filled by an audience which is always more than respectfully attentive. Other Concerts, equally good in their way, occur on the afternoon and evening of every Sunday at the Brühl'sche Terrace, under Herr Trenkler. The orchestra is a little smaller than at the Belvedere, and symphonies are not given in their entirety, but the execution, especially in the case of the wind, is both spirited and correct.

An institution peculiar in its way is the Tonkünstlerverein, a club of which the members are elected by a committee. At the meetings in a concert hall of moderate size, unknown or forgotten masterpieces of chamber music are unearthed and performed by gifted artists, who are usually on the earlier steps of the ladder of preferment; the audience, however, always includes in force veterans, whose reputation has long since become European. On a recent occasion, an interesting sonata by a living composer named Meyer-Olbersleben, Professor at the Musical University of Wurzburg, was performed by Herr Roth (piano) and Herr Remmele (viola alta); the latter artist has made a specialty of his rarely heard instrument, which both in size and tone more nearly approaches the violoncello than the ordinary tenor. The composition is modern in form, but without crudeness of harmony, and abounds in melodious phrases. The second number was an Adagio and Rondo Concertant (sic) for piano, violin, viola, and violoncello, by Schubert. The principal part in this work, which is strongly imbued with the spirit of Mozart, was taken by Herr Höpner, Organist of the Kreuzkirche. The only remaining number was a Concertante Quartet for oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, with orchestral accompaniment. This work, written by Mozart in his best vein, was till recently thought to have been lost. It is now to be found in the Breitkopf edition of Mozart's works (series 24, supplement 7-A). A parenthetical tribute is due to the organist just mentioned, who at his clever performances at 2 p.m. on Saturdays, is breaking through the traditional loud reading of organ fugue in Germany and introducing light and shade. The reasons given by the German organists for the monotonous and overloaded registering of Bach—some ascribing it to a well-known wish of that great master, others to the mechanical difficulty of changing from forte to piano offered by German organs—are too inconsistent to have much weight; and Herr Höpner is rendering a public service in introducing a new régime. To return for a moment to the Tonkünstlerverein, a not unimportant feature of the meetings is that on the last chord being struck, the seats disappear with magical rapidity, and the hall is occupied by tables covered with a substantial supper. Visitors are only admitted upon their establishing some claim to be effectives, either as composers, performers, or critics.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, October 10.

The thirtieth annual Festival of the Worcester County (Massachusetts) Musical Association, which took place during the last week of September, was a disappointment to all those who love choral music, and who believe that the peculiar province of festivals is to cultivate choral music. Not only was there not a single new composition in the scheme, but only three choral works were given in the eight Concerts, and only one of these three works was really well given—namely, Bruch's "Arminius," which was fresh in the minds of the singers from the previous year, when it was first performed in Worcester. The critics who went to the Festival from New York and Boston expressed their disappointment at not being privileged to record a change in the policy of the Festival managers; but as they have been singing in the same minor key for several years without effect, the provincial subjects of metropolitan censorship are not likely to pay any more heed to them after this last meeting, which, whatever the critics may say, is probably set down in their books as the most successful Festival ever held in Worcester, simply because the ticket sales were the largest. They will probably forget that they were kept before the public all the week in the attitude of apologists because of the want of foresight and wisdom shown in the planning of the meetings. That out of eight programmes only four were carried out strictly as announced officially, and that though the policy of relieving a year's famine with a week's feast may tend to make a public omnivorous rather than discriminating, still it will not do to count too much on the good nature of that public, surrounded as it is with communities whose musical activities are growing with every year. If instead of repeating "Arminius," "The Damnation of Faust," and "Elijah," the managers had given the public one new work, say Sullivan's "Golden Legend" or Buck's "Light of Asia," it is safe to say that the purchasers of season tickets would have felt more than ever encouraged to patronise the Festival undertaking. But the managers have no respect for the festival idea as it has been exemplified year after year in Cincinnati, and so long as their miscellaneous Concerts are patronised as generously as they were two weeks ago, they will probably pursue the present policy. With it they are putting money into the Association's purse, which, of course, is an exceedingly agreeable occupation.

The soloists of the Festival, as usual, were legion. Only a few of them were engaged to sing at more than one Concert, and their selections were of a miscellaneous character. The principal sopranos were Madame Giulia Valda and Madame Eugenie Pappenheim. The latter sang but once, and then made way for Miss Franklin, of Boston. Madame Valda achieved a single pronounced success—in an operatic air, "Caro nome," from "Rigoletto." The principal contralto was Madame Hastreiter, whose large manner and hearty style made her the favourite singer of the Festival. Negotiations with Max Alvary fell through, and the tenor work was divided between Theodore Toedt and A. L. King; while Max Heinrich, A. E. Stoddard, and J. M. Babcock sang the baritone and bass songs. The orchestral parts were played by the Symphony orchestra of Boston, and showed a decided improvement on the bands that have been accustomed to play at Worcester. Mr. Carl Zerrahn, who has filled the position for many years, was again the Conductor. Our festivals multiply and wax apace. In Petersburg, Virginia, an excellent chorus has been formed under the intelligent direction of H. Noltenius, a wealthy tobacco planter of German nationality, and so successful have been the annual festivals given there, with the assistance of Mr. Zerrahn and an orchestra from Baltimore, that this year the Association is building an Academy of Music as a permanent home for the festivals and for other entertainments. Buffalo, which is already rejoicing in a new music hall, will hold its third Festival on October 18, 19, 21, and 22. Mr. Walter J. Damrosch will be the Conductor of the Festival, the orchestra will be drawn from the New York Symphony Society, and the principal soloists will be Miss Ella Earle, of New York, Madame Hastreiter, Max Alvary, Max Heinrich, Rudolf von Milde, and Miss Adele Aus der Ohe. There will be five Concerts, one devoted wholly to Wagner's music. In the others, Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, and Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" will be produced. Concerning the biennial festival to be given at Cincinnati next May, under the direction of Theodore Thomas, nothing new is reported except the engagement of Mr. Lloyd, of London, as tenor soloist.

But talk about music that is only in articulo can scarcely be interesting at such extremely long range, and I will no longer burden the page with talk of future prospects. In another month the season will have opened in all the large cities, and we shall know whether or not the promises of many plausible prospectuses are to be kept. At present we are all counting the rests before the prelude.

A note in THE MUSICAL TIMES of last month implies that the new Wagner Society organised in New York intended to assume the responsibility of Concert-giving on a large scale. Such is not the case. The Society, as a matter of fact, is not yet thoroughly organised and, though it may use its influence in behalf of certain Concerts that represent progressive ideas, it will not go into the Concert business itself. Its purposes are defined to be: to promote knowledge and appreciation of the art-principles set forth in the literary and musical compositions of Richard Wagner; to foster a national spirit in American musical culture; to encourage sincerity in the attitude of the public toward music; to advance progressive ideas touching musical forms and the lyric drama; and to forward fellowship among its members. It is likely to develop into a large and influential club, as its organisation has been hailed with enthusiasm by professional musicians as well as amateurs. Mr. E. C. Stanton, managing director of the Metropolitan Opera House, will in all likelihood be its first president.

Professor Karl Klindworth has decided to make New York his home during the coming season. Teresina Tua arrived in New York yesterday.

OBITUARY.

ROBERT AUGUST STOEPEL, a well-known orchestral leader, died at his residence in New York, on the 1st ult., in the arms of his daughter, Mrs. Henry Miller, known in the theatrical profession as Miss Bijou Heron. Stoepel was born in Berlin in 1821. His father was a famous Court musician, known as Robert Stoepel, which name August subsequently adopted. He studied at Berlin, and at Paris, at the Conservatoire de Musique. He soon became known, and in 1850 Max Maretzek took him to America as orchestral leader. Stoepel became connected with Wallack's old theatre, where he remained many years. When Dion Boucicault was in the States, Stoepel wrote the music for all his plays, including the well-known "Ghost melody in the Corsican Brothers." Under his bâton "La Grande Duchesse de Gerolstein," "La Vie Parisienne," "Fleur de Thé," and "Genevieve de Brabant" were produced at the old French Theatre, in Fourteenth Street, New York. He wrote the music for Mr. Daly's productions of "Hurricane," "Divorce," "Frou Frou," "Man and Wife," and "Fernande." After this engagement he came to England, where Mr. Henry Irving employed him as composer of incidental music and leader of orchestra. Stoepel wrote the music for many of Irving's first productions. He returned to America, and became leader of the orchestra for Augustin Daly at his present theatre. He retained this position until about three years ago, when he became very deaf, and, as his daughter had married, he retired. He produced two operas in Paris called "Indiana," and "Charlemagne." He also wrote an opera called "Aldershot," which was given in London. Upon his return to America he wrote several other operas, two of which were to have been produced this winter; at the time of his death he was working hard at their completion. One of these was called "Unita," the other "The Mahdi." He also wrote a cantata called "Hiawatha." At one time he had accumulated a fortune of £20,000, £12,000 of which he lost during a real estate panic in New York. Recently, upon the suggestion of his daughter, he sank about £6,000 in an annuity. The first instalment was to have been paid in January next.

MAURICE STRAKOSCH, the celebrated impresario, died on the 8th ult., at his house in the Rue de la Bruyère, Paris. The immediate cause of his death was congestion of the lungs and asthma, from which he had been a sufferer for many years. He was born at Lemberg in 1825. Educated originally as a vocalist, he subsequently relinquished the idea of becoming a singer, and devoted himself to the study of the pianoforte. His fame, however, rests chiefly on his talents as an impresario. His musical education was carried on at Pesth and Vienna; he made his début as a pianist at Naples in 1846, with a brilliant success. In 1851 he migrated to America, and established himself at New York as a professor of piano and singing. Here he met Amalia Patti, who became his wife, and it was to him that her sister, Adelina Patti, owed that early training which afterwards materially aided her success as a vocalist. He returned to Europe with his sister-in-law, accompanying her in her various tours until her marriage with the Marquis de Caux, when he went back to America, and in concert with his brother Max, organised various musical enterprises. He was indefatigable in discovering and developing talent. The list of artists who have appeared under his auspices includes the names of Madame Nilsson, Madame Minnie Hauk, Miss Arnoldsen, Mdlle. de Belocca, Mdlle. Heilbron, and Madame Albani, amongst others more or less distinguished. Latterly he resided chiefly in Paris, whence he visited the chief towns of Europe, including London, the last visit he paid to the Metropolis being on the occasion of Mdlle. Arnoldsen's début here. He was in harness almost up to his final moment, having but two hours before his death given a singing lesson to one of his most recent protegées. He was the composer of pianoforte fantasias, transcriptions, and studies, and a few months ago he published his Memoirs entitled "Souvenirs d'un Impresario" (reference to which will be found in another part of this paper). He was buried, on the 11th ult., in the cemetery of Père la Chaise, whither his remains were followed by several of his friends distinguished in the artistic world.

M. LOUIS BRANDUS, music publisher of Paris, died at his house in the Rue Richelieu by his own hand on September 30. He took a solution of cyanide of potassium in a fit of depression. He had been in low spirits for several days previously, though the cause was not apparent. He was nearly seventy years of age. The firm of which he was the head possessed the copyrights of many of Rossini's works, many of Offenbach's, and nearly all of Meyerbeer's. M. Brandus was the friend and executor of Meyerbeer, and was wont to relate many interesting stories concerning him. He was a frequent visitor to London until about ten years ago, and at his hospitable house in Paris he was wont to gather many of the most eminent men in literature, music, and the pictorial arts of all countries.

IN addition to the many repetitions of Dr. Villiers Stanford's "Irish" Symphony which have been already arranged in the United Kingdom, we have much pleasure in stating that performances are to be given in Vienna, under Dr. Hans Richter; in Hamburg, under Dr. Hans von Bülow; and in several of the most important cities of the United States.

THE opening Concert of the forthcoming series of Novello's Oratorio Concerts is announced to take place on the 10th inst., when Mackenzie's Jubilee Ode, followed by Dvorák's "The Spectre's Bride" will be given, under the direction of Mr. Randegger. The solos will be sung by Madame Albani, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Santley.

SPECIAL Thanksgiving Services were held at St. John's, Waterloo Road, S.E., on Thursday evening, September 29, and the Sunday following, when the church was most beautifully decorated with corn and various fruits. Stainer's festival setting of Magnificat and Nunc dimittis was used on Thursday, and A. J. Dye's new Service in D on Sunday evening, the Anthem being by Tours, to the words, "While the earth remaineth." After each service a portion of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was sung. On Thursday, the 20th ult., the first of the Free Oratorio Services for this season was given at the same church, the work selected being Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang." This was effectively rendered under the conductorship of the Vicar, and was accompanied on the organ by Mr. Henry J. B. Dart, Organist to the Church, who also played an organ arrangement of the Symphony. The soloists were Masters Warren and Edwards (of St. John's choir), and Mr. J. Gostick. Mrs. Dart presided at the pianoforte. It is proposed to give Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm on Sunday evening, November 6; Sir A. Sullivan's "Prodigal Son" on Thursday, November 16; Spohr's "Last Judgment" on Thursdays, December 1 and 15; and Handel's "Messiah" on December 22.

At the Avenue Theatre, on the 26th ult., a new Comic Opera, called "The Old Guard," was produced with unusual success. The music is by Planquette, the composer of many other operas of the lighter kind which have won their way into popularity. The music is pretty, if not in every number original, but the chief cause of the success achieved was found in the performance. The parts were entrusted to singers who knew their work, and could bring natural as well as high artistic qualifications to support their assumptions. Mr. Alec Marsh, who made a favourable impression at Norwich recently, represented a young soldier effectively, singing his music with artistic care and finish. Miss Henrietta Polak, a young and graceful vocalist, made a hit with a regimental song, and Miss Wentworth did her best with a part not wholly suited to her powers. The most vivid impression was made by Miss Marian Edgcumbe, better known as Marian Mackenzie, her beautiful voice, well ordered vocalisation, and her natural talent for acting, making her an acquisition to the stage which the audience was not slow to welcome most heartily. Mr. J. Tapley, the tenor, also sings earnestly, and the humorous element in the comic opera is supplied by Messrs. Roberts and Dallas. The opera is well and effectively mounted.

Mr. F. M. Wallace, an excellent artist, and one of the best of our English orchestral players, has been compelled by ill-health to seek a more genial climate. The Lytellton Times records a musical event in which he took part, by which it may be inferred that his health has been partly, if not wholly, re-established. In aid of the funds of the Canterbury Engineer Volunteers an excellent Concert was given at the Theatre Royal, Lytellton, N.Z., on August 20. The Conductor was Mr. A. Towsey, a musician who received his education at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, and who is now doing good work in fostering a love for the art in the distant colony. Some well chosen vocal pieces were acceptably given by Miss Dixie, Mrs. Westmacott, Mrs. J. P. Kelly, Miss E. Buchanan, Mr. R. A. Joseph, and Mr. Millar, all of which were well received by the audience, which included a large attendance of volunteer officers in uniform. The special feature of the Concert was the violin playing of Mr. F. M. Wallace, whose delicate treatment of several brilliant fantasias roused the enthusiasm of the hearers to the highest pitch. For each piece an encore was demanded and complied with, his beautiful playing exhibiting his mastery over the instrument and his power of enlisting the sympathies of those who heard him.

The British Bandsman is the title of a new monthly magazine for bandmasters and members of military and brass bands. The Editor, Mr. James Waterson, in a preliminary address, states that "the aim of the paper is to stimulate, and, where it is non-existent, to create and foster in bandsmen a desire for, and a love of, good and high-class music, to provide recreation and instructive literature for master and pupil, to popularise band music, and, lastly, to urge a claim for a higher status in the musical world for band professors." These are commendable objects, which all who wish well to art will be glad to see carried out. The recent military decree, which restricts the employment of the services of regimental brass bands to a limited area, may help the improvement of brass band music within that area. In other places where brass bands have not the advantage of typical examples, the British Bandsman, the Brass Band News, of Liverpool, and like publications, have a worthy mission to fulfil in stimulating amateurs and professionals to attain that degree of excellence which may make them in their turn patterns for imitation or centres of musical civilisation. Having such aims in view, the British Bandsman has not only a reason for its existence, but is worthy of all possible encouragement.

A Harvest Festival was held at Holy Trinity Church, Wimbledon, on the 9th ult. The decorations, which were magnificent, were confined principally to the east end. The services commenced at a quarter to eight in the morning, when the Litany was said, and was followed by a celebration of the Holy Communion. Matins was held at eleven. The choir entered the church by the west door, singing the hymn "Come, ye thankful people, come." The service was fully choral. The Te Deum was sung to a setting in B flat by J. E. West, and the Benedictus was Stainer in A. The Anthem, which was very effectively rendered by the choir, was Stainer's "Ye shall dwell in the land." At the choral celebration of the Holy Communion the music was by Tours in C. The choir left the church singing the Nunc dimittis. There was a children's service in the afternoon. At Evensong the Processional hymn was "Praise, O praise our God and King." W. G. Wood's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F were used, and the Anthem was "Fear not, O land" (Goss). The final hymn was "Now thank we all our God." Stainer's Sevenfold Amen was sung at the conclusion of both Matins and Evensong.

At the farewell service for the Right Rev. Canon Charles E. Camidge, D.D., the newly consecrated Bishop of Bathurst, at York Minster, on the 19th ult., the musical portion included compositions from five generations of one family, relatives of the Bishop. Such a circumstance is probably unique in history. The processional hymn was to a tune adapted from a short Anthem, by John Camidge, who was appointed Organist of York Minster in 1756, and died in 1803. The Psalms and Canticles were sung to chants composed by Matthew Camidge, son of the above, and his successor, who died in 1844. The Anthem ("Sing unto the Lord") was by Dr. Camidge, son of the above Matthew, and his successor as Organist, who died in 1859 (the quartet in this Anthem was performed at the York Festival in 1825). The Kyrie, Creed, Sanctus, and Gloria were by John Camidge, grandson of Dr. Camidge, and the present Organist of Beverley Minster; and during the offertory was sung "Be merciful after Thy power," by Thomas S. Camidge, son of Dr. Camidge, his deputy Organist at the Minster, and father of Mr. J. Camidge, of Beverley.

The Harvest Festival Service at the Church of Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill, on Saturday, the 8th ult., was signalised by a performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," with a full orchestra and a choir, numbering together upwards of 100 executants. Dr. Walmisley Little, the Organist and Music Director, had secured an unusually good orchestra for the occasion, whose efficiency, with that of the choir, was most satisfactorily demonstrated by the excellent rendering given of the music all through the service. A new Magnificat in B flat, specially composed for the festival by Mr. W. G. Wood, well written for both voices and orchestra, was performed. Mr. Wood also proved his ability as an organ player, by an admirable rendering of Handel's Concerto in F (No. 4). The solo parts in the Cantata were entrusted to Mr. Henry Guy, and to Masters Humm (of the Temple Church) and Gaines. The service was concluded by the performance of the March from Dr. Walmisley Little's Cantata "The Rock of Israel," for band and organ. Dr. Little conducted the music throughout.

Harvest Festival Services were held on Thursday, the 20th, and Sunday, the 23rd ult., at the Church of St. John, Fulham, S.W. On Thursday evening the Service was Smart's fine setting in B flat. The Anthem was the "Wilderness," by Goss, and a Selection from Weber's "Jubilee" (Harvest) Cantata was also sung. The solo artists were Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. P. Lewis, and Mr. Frank May. On Sunday morning the service was fully choral. The Te Deum and Jubilate was Smart's in F, the Anthem being "Let Thy shield from ill defend us" (Weber). A bass solo and chorus was effectively sung by Mr. Frank May. The evening service opened with the Hymn "Now thank we all our God"; the Service was Smart's in B flat. The aria, "Thy glorious deeds," from "Samson" (Handel), sung by Mr. Frank May, and an Air by Cowen, sung by Miss Hannah Jones, concluding with the Chorus "Sing and be joyful" (Graun), were given as the Anthem. The Organist and Choirmaster was Mr. Henry J. Wood.

According to a statement printed in the Liverpool Post, Mr. W. Ludwig has had a chase of a most exciting character. He was under an engagement to sing in New York, and it was necessary that he should leave by the Servia, starting from Queenstown on the 23rd ult. He missed the connecting train at Dublin. Hiring a locomotive, he packed his baggage in the coal-tender, and, paying £50 for the service, started after the mail. On reaching Queenstown he found to his dismay that the Servia was under weigh. There was still a chance to avoid the penalty for failure to fulfil his engagement. A tug was secured, and he jumped on board with his baggage, and out he went upon the second half of his adventurous journey. Thanks to much "hooting" from the tug's siren and other signals, the attention of the Cunarder was attracted and the engines were stopped, the singer in a few moments finding himself on board the ship in which his passage was secured, only £100 poorer than when he left Dublin.

ON Thursday, the 6th ult., the Harvest Festival was held in St. Stephen's Church, Poplar, E. The choir was augmented for the occasion and numbered sixty voices. The accompaniment was furnished by the organ and thirteen wind and stringed instruments. The following were included in the service: Opening Voluntary, "Largo from 13th Symphony" (Haydn), Magnificat and Nunc dimittis (Stainer in D); Anthem, "The earth is the Lord's" (Lowe). At the conclusion of the service the Gloria in Excelsis, from the "Twelfth Mass" (Mozart), was given, the concluding Voluntary being the first movement of the Overture to "Saul" (Handel). On Sunday, the 9th ult., the Festival was continued. In the morning the Anthem was "O Lord how manifold are Thy works" (Barnby) and the Communion Service (Woodward in E flat). In the evening a repetition of what was done on the Thursday was given. Mr. J. Wicking Neal, the Organist of the Church, conducted, and Mr. R. B. Elliott presided at the organ.

A MOST successful Harvest Festival was held at Holy Trinity, Tollington Park, on Saturday and Sunday, the 15th and 16th ult. The first service of the Festival was a full choral evensong, with orchestra, on Saturday. The Service was Smart in F. The Anthem was "The Wilderness," by Sir John Goss, specially scored for the occasion by Mr. Dean, the Organist of the Church. The congregation joined in the Hymn "Onward, Christian Soldiers," as set by Sir A. Sullivan. The solos and the trio in the Anthem were effectively rendered by members of the choir. After the service the orchestra and organ played Costa's March from "Naaman." Mr. Dean conducted, and Dr. Pearce, Organist of St. Clement's, Eastcheap, presided at the organ, and rendered good help to the service throughout. The Sunday services were a Choral celebration, Children's Flower Service, and Choral Evensong, at which the Anthem of the previous day was repeated, but Gadsby in C was substituted for Smart's Service.

SPECIAL Services of Thanksgiving for the Harvest were held at St. John's, Angell Town, Brixton, upon the Feast of SS. Michael and All Angels, and the Sunday within the octave. The services commenced with evensong on St. Michael's Day. Mr. John Harrison was at the organ, and the choir was conducted by Mr. W. J. Winbolt, the Organist of the Church. Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Stainer in A, the Anthem after the third Collect being "I will give thanks" (Barnby), and the concluding Anthem, "Hallelujah" (Handel), all being well rendered. On Sunday morning there were two celebrations of Holy Communion. The music selected was Responses, Tallis's Festival; Te Deum, Goss in F; Jubilate, Boyce in A; and for the Anthem, Barnby's "O Lord, how manifold." Evensong was preceded by a special service for children. The music was the same as on St. Michael's Day, except that Mozart's "Glorious is Thy name" was sung in place of the Hallelujah Chorus.

THANKSGIVING Services for the Harvest were held on Wednesday evening, September 29, and the Sunday following, at St. Agnes', Kennington Park, S.E. On Wednesday evening Bach's arrangement of the "Peregrine Tone" was sung for the Magnificat, the Anthem being Thorne's "All Thy works." On Sunday morning the Communion Service used was Schubert in G throughout. Stainer's Anthem "Ye shall dwell in the land," was sung at the offertory. In the evening the service was of a highly festal character, Stanford's Te Deum in B flat being sung at the conclusion. Mr. W. Hedgcock at the organ was assisted at all the services by trumpets and drums in addition, their effect being specially noticeable in the March from Raff's "Leonore" Symphony, which was played in the evening as a concluding voluntary.

AT the University of Oxford, on the 21st ult., the following satisfied the Examiners for the degree of Mus. Bac.:—R. B. Bateman, New College and Aylesbury; J. M. Field, New College and Altrincham; C. J. Revell, New College and Wilton, Taunton; T. H. Y. Trotter, B.A., New College and Campden Hill, Kensington, London, W.; W. Wolstenholme, Worcester College, and of the Blind College, Worcester. For the degree of Mus. Doc.:—J. Greig, Queen's College and Edinburgh; The Rev. J. H. Mee, M.A., Merton College; M. J. Monk, New College and Banbury; H. Plumridge, Keble College and Oxford. THE annual Harvest Festival Services in connection with St. Barnabas, South Kennington, were held on the 13th and 16th ult. The services were fully choral, the Anthem in the morning being Gounod's "Sing praises unto the Lord," and the Communion Service was sung to Dykes in F. In the evening, the Canticles were Dr. E. J. Hopkins's Cantate and Deus in B flat, the Anthem Barnby's "I will give thanks," and at the conclusion of the service Smart's Te Deum in F was given. The voices were assisted throughout the service by a trumpet well played by Mr. Gardner, and after the service that gentleman and the Organist, Mr. Fred. W. Lacey (who presided at the organ throughout the services), played a selection of music for trumpet and organ, which was much appreciated.

THE first of two Harvest Festivals at St. Clement Danes, Strand, was held on September 28, Stainer's Service in B flat and Tours's Anthem "While the earth remaineth" being given by the Choir of St. John's, Waterloo Road. Mr. H. J. B. Dart was at the organ. The second Festival was rendered on September 30, by the choir and orchestra of St. Stephen's, Walworth, S.E. There were over eighty voices in the choir, and twenty instruments in the orchestra. The Canticles were Tours in F; the Anthem "Great is the Lord," by E. A. Sydenham. "The heavens are telling" was sung at the close of the service. The band and organ then played the "March of the Israelites," from Costa's "Eli." Mr. F. J. Knapp was Choirmaster and Mr. W. J. Varney, Organist.

THE organ in St. Andrew's Church, Canal Road, Hoxton, having undergone thorough reconstruction and enlargement by Mr. F. Slater, of Bow, was opened by Dr. Bridge on Wednesday, September 28. The instrument now contains fifteen stops, two manuals, and a pedal compass of thirty notes. The swell manual and draw stops are on the tubular pneumatic principle, and the pedals according to the College of Organists' requirements. Dr. Bridge effectively displayed the tone of the various stops, giving a Recital after accompanying the service. Mr. Gawthrop, of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St. James's, sang the tenor solos. The choir was augmented for the occasion by that of St. Leonard, Shoreditch. Mr. Feline, Organist and Choirmaster of St. Andrew's, acted as Conductor.

ON the 2nd ult., at St. Andrew's, West Kensington, the Harvest Festival Services of the preceding Thursday were repeated in the evening by a largely augmented choir. The service was fully choral. Barnby's setting in E to the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung with great precision, excellent quality of tone being preserved throughout. The Anthem was Stainer's "Ye shall dwell in the land." After the service, portions of the "Hymn of Praise" were sung, the first and last chorus being given with good attack. The chief feature was the most excellent rendering, by Mr. Collwyn Thomas, of the solos "Sing ye praise" and the "Sorrows of death," especially the latter. The service was under the direction of Mr. Edgar Pettman, A.C.O., Organist and Director of the Choir.

THE Finsbury Choral Association, one of the many suburban musical Societies deserving of all encouragement, inaugurated its ninth season with a Conversazione in the Holloway Hall, on September 22. The Society proposes to give three Subscription Concerts, when Barnby's "Rebekah," Gade's "Crusaders," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Gounod's "Gallia," and Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" will be presented. The Committee hope that the first and the last of the group of works selected will be under the personal direction of their composers. The season will end with "The Messiah," as an extra performance not included in the subscription. The services of some of the best among the rising vocalists have been secured for the solos, and the band will be led by Mr. Carrodus.

The Harvest Festival at Christ Church, Forest Hill, S.E., was held on Thursday, the 6th ult., the church being most artistically decorated and filled with an attentive congregation. The Rev. Mr. Scolefield, of Eton College, was the preacher. The service was fully choral, including a fine number from Mr. Cowen's "Ruth," recently given at Norwich Musical Festival, "How excellent." The important tenor solo part was well given by Mr. Edwin Bryant, and the choir was under the direction of Mr. Wm. McDonell. The Festival was continued over the following Sunday, when Smart's "The Lord hath done" was sung. His Te Deum in F gave a dignified finish to the evening services on Thursday and Sunday.

A Harvest Festival was held at the Parish Church of St. John the Baptist, Barnet, on the 29th September (Feast of St. Michael and All Angels). The church was decorated with considerable taste for the choral evensong, which was made the chief office of the day. The choir gave a careful rendering of Tours's Service in F, and the Anthem selected was Goss's "Fear not, O land," in which Mr. W. J. Hall sang the bass solo with good effect. At the conclusion, Madame Florence Winn sang "Jerusalem" (Parker) and "O rest in the Lord," from "Elijah." Mr. H. W. Poole, the Organist and Choirmaster, conducted the service, and subsequently gave a Recital on the new three-manual organ erected by Messrs. W. Hill & Son.

St. Saviour's (South Hampstead) Harvest Festival Services were celebrated on the 15th and 16th ult. The Service on Saturday evening (15th) being Bunnett, and the Anthem "The Lord is loving unto every man," by Garrett. On Sunday there was full choral service, Garrett's Anthem being repeated at the morning service, also Stainer's Te Deum. In the afternoon the Anthem was Barnby's "O Lord, how manifold." In the evening Stainer's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis was sung, the Anthem being by Sydenham "Great is the Lord and marvellous." During the offertory the Hallelujah Chorus was excellently rendered under the direction of the Choirmaster, Mr. A. J. Greenish, F.C.O., Mus. Bac., Cantab.

The Wycliffe Chapel Choir, who have just taken the first prize for church choirs at the recent competitions at the People's Palace, Mile End, held a congratulatory meeting on Thursday, September 22, when Pattison's Cantata "John Bull and his trades" was excellently rendered in character by the choir, accompanied by Mr. F. A. Jeneson and Miss Bonallack. The programme also included two violin solos by Miss Adela Duckham and some songs by Miss Clara Dowell, Miss Hood, and Mr. Doig. The choir also sang Leslie's "Troubadour" with refinement and expression. A very pleasant addition to the programme was made by the presentation to Mr. George Merritt, the Choirmaster, of a silver-mounted ebony bâton.

A Harvest Thanksgiving Service was celebrated at the East Hill Baptist Chapel, Wandsworth, on Thursday, the 20th ult. The chapel was tastefully decorated. The service was very hearty, the large congregation joining in the well-known Harvest hymns with much vigour. After the service, the choir sang a selection of Harvest anthems by Dr. Stainer, Sydenham, T. Mee Pattison, &c., all the music being rendered in a praiseworthy manner. Mr. John Ulrich, Choirmaster, conducted, and Mr. James Howlett presided at the organ. At the final rehearsal, on Tuesday evening, the members of the choir presented their choirmaster with a very handsome bâton, in recognition of his services for the last four years.

The Harvest Festival at St. Peter's, Brockley, took place on Friday, September 30, when the evening service was sung to Stainer in A, and the Anthem was C. J. Frost's "Come, ye thankful people, come," in which the congregation joined at the end. Handel's Hallelujah, from the "Messiah," was sung after the sermon, and again after the morning service on Sunday, October 2, when Goss's "Fear not, O land" formed the Anthem. In the evening of that day, in addition to the repetition of Frost's Anthem, "Come, ye thankful," Beethoven's Hallelujah Chorus, from the "Mount of Olives," was sung at the conclusion of the service.

On Thursday evening, the 13th ult., at the Harvest Festival week-night Service, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was sung, with orchestral accompaniment, at Holy Trinity, Upper Tooting, by the joint choirs of Streatham Parish Church and Holy Trinity, Upper Tooting, kind help being also given by members of other choirs. Masters Humm and Green, and Mr. E. Bryant were the soloists. The orchestra comprised about twenty-two instrumentalists. Mr. Charles T. Cooke presided at the piano, Mr. Lee Davis at the organ. The Magnificat was sung to Gadsby's setting in C. Mr. Alfred Physick, the Organist of the Church, conducted.

After the service, Mr. Herbert Rolfe, A.C.O., the Organist and Choirmaster, played the following selection:—Postlude in D (H. Smart), Andante in G minor (E. Silas), and Toccata and Fugue in D minor (J. S. Bach). On the 16th, the Anthem in the morning was Macfarren's "O Lord, how manifold," and in the evening Bunnett's Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur in F, and "O taste and see" (Goss) were sung.

The members of the Grosvenor Choral Society gave their 188th monthly Concert at the Grosvenor Hall on Friday evening, the 21st ult., when Callcott's "Golden Harvest" was well rendered, both by soloists and choir. The programme was filled up with a miscellaneous selection, including "All hail, the noble victor," from Auber's "Masaniello." Mrs. T. P. Frame and Miss Hartley presided at the piano. Mr. David Woodhouse conducted.

The Organ Recital on the 4th ult., at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C., was given by Mr. Henry J. Wood. His programme included works by Bach, Best, E. C. Nunn, and Widor. An interesting feature in the Recital was the performance of three clever new organ pieces—Romance, Andante con moto, and Gavotte, by Cuthbert Nunn (Charles Lucas Medalist, R.A.M.). The vocalist was Mr. B. H. Grove, who gave a fine rendering of Gounod's "Nazareth" and "Now heav'n in fullest glory shone" ("Creation") Haydn, and whose artistic singing and fine voice were greatly appreciated by a large congregation.

REVIEWS.

A Short History of Cheap Music.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

"The best books," said Leigh Hunt, "are those which can be carried into a corner, and which present attractive matter at any page which opens." Accepting this definition, the "Short History" is certainly entitled to a place among so enviable a catalogue. The musical reader will find an element of delight in each leaf, and even the untechnical will discover food for reflection and matter of much interest. It is professedly a short history of cheap music as exemplified in the records of the house of Novello, Ewer and Co.—with especial reference to the first fifty years of the reign of her most gracious Majesty Queen Victoria. It is actually the nucleus of the history of music generally, during the period above-named, and as such will probably be taken by the historian of the future as the most suggestive means for more elaborate work that could conveniently be found. As Sir George Grove says of the work in his Preface, "It chronicles an advance of which we may be proud in one of the highest departments of mental progress and one of the noblest of the arts—an advance which may claim a special merit among the great movements of the day, because music ministers to the imagination of man, and leaves untouched his baser faculties."

The record begins with an Introduction describing the state of music between the years 1811 and 1836, the period of the actual foundation of the publishing house by Vincent Novello. Some very curious and interesting facts are related concerning the condition of music during the first portion of the present century, and many noteworthy particulars are given concerning the attempts to provide cheap music and to conquer the prejudices of those who were opposed to such innovations. The introduction of labour-saving machinery, the improvements in the processes of printing, the struggles to free the press from such vexatious imposts as then hindered progress, and the joint connection of the rising firm with the great composer Mendelssohn, whose Oratorio "St. Paul" was first presented to the public in an acceptable form by the house, and a number of other matters pregnant with interest are told in this introduction. With the opening days of the Queen's reign came a time of greater activity for the house. The growing prosperity of Choral Societies, the great musical mission of the late John Hullah, the institution of The Musical Times as a Singing Class Circular, the invention of the world famous Octavo Editions of the Oratorios, the establishment of Alfred Novello as a printer on his own account, and the demand for his publications, necessitating the formation of direct agencies in America, form the chief points of the history of the first decade. The second chapter relates the history of the reduced prices, and the efforts made to obtain the removal of the Taxes on knowledge and the newspaper stamp, efforts which testify to the fact that Alfred Novello had become, as it were, a missionary on behalf of cheap literature. The more intimate connection of Mr. Henry Littleton with the house, and the effect of his enterprising spirit and persevering nature upon its fortunes by the extension of the principles upon which it was founded, form the chief themes of the third chapter, 1858—1867.

In these chapters is shown the first substantial fruits of the labours of Alfred Novello, not only in the increased prosperity of the firm, but also in the enormous spread of musical institutions and of the love of the art in all parts of the country. Choral societies were established throughout the length and breadth of the land, and even the humblest village church had its choir. These things were made possible by the productions of the firm. A quarter of a century before, choral societies were few and far between, because there was no cheap music. The members of each society often made their own voice or band parts, and the enthusiasm which would prompt men to such sacrifices of time and patience was not always at equal pressure. So soon as it was found that good and correct parts or vocal scores could be purchased at small cost, the institution of choral societies followed as a matter of course. In like manner the music in the service of prayer and praise was made capable of improvement. The répertoires in the "Choirs and places where they sing," were increased by the addition of the classical works of the greatest writers of sacred music, and improvement in the character of the service by the admission of taste and refinement, excited the emulation of those to whom music had been hitherto either a "dark and dumb ceremony," or was so carelessly done that interest in its effects was weakened or lost. Domestic music was also more generally cultivated, and so the land was made musical. High and low, rich and poor, all could enjoy the pleasures to be derived from communion with the spirits of the present and past in music, and this almost entirely through the efforts of the house. But for the foresight and enterprise of Alfred Novello and the energy of his successors, music would have been retarded some half-a-century in its progress towards popularity. Therefore, the greatness of the work done can neither be over-estimated nor over-praised.

In the fourth chapter, 1868—1877, the establishment of cheap Concerts by the firm as a natural sequence to the issue of cheap music is told; and the connection of the house with all the great musicians of the time, and the wide recognition throughout the world of the services of the house in the cause of cheap music, form the chief theme of the final chapter.

The book is written in a genial spirit and in a modest style. It is adorned with portraits of Vincent Novello, Alfred Novello, and Henry Littleton—the three worthies in the history of the firm whose labours have been so successful in carrying out the plan which called it into existence—in the form of most artistic etchings by Mr. H. R. Robertson. The book is one of the most perfect specimens of typography produced during the last few years, when so much has been done to make the art of printing worthy of the century. As it is no mere trade circular, but a faithful and honest account of what has been done through a period of more than three-quarters of a century to popularise music in England, either alone or in combination with recognised institutions, it may be read with delight and studied with profit. For the reason stated in the outset it deserves to be classed among Leigh Hunt's pattern books.

The Holy Vision. Sacred Song. The words written by F. E. Weatherly. The music composed by Charles Gounod. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

There are few composers who know how to write well and expressively for the voice better than the composer of "The Redemption." The present song—one of his latest and happiest efforts—is no exception to the rule. It is in every respect a fine composition, and intensifies the spirit of the words to a degree only reached by Gounod among all modern musicians. The several verses, which portray the successive stages of her Son's suffering, as seen in a vision of the Virgin Mother, accumulate the interest to the final point, and the hearer is carried in willing captivity by the powerful eloquence of the phrases to the culminating peroration, which is at once devotional, expressive, and thrilling. It was sung with brilliant result by Mr. Edward Lloyd at the Norwich Festival, and tenor vocalists will be glad to add the song to their répertoires. The compass being suitable, it would be equally effective for a soprano voice. The author of the words has written a large number of verses that have found their way into popularity.

The Congregational Church Music Hymnal. Part 2. Litanies and Chants. [Hodder and Stoughton.]

The first portion of the Hymnal containing the hymns, &c., was noticed in our August number. The general remarks as to the character of the work will be sufficiently fresh in the minds of those interested in the subject to obviate the necessity of traversing the same ground. It will be enough to say that a spirit of foresight and enterprise distinguishes both portions, and that this second volume, containing Parts 2 and 3 of the work, is equally as valuable as the former. No. 2 contains metrical Litanies, and single and double chants, arranged to passages of Scripture especially pointed for singing; and No. 3 has an admirable selection of short anthems, including translations of the Advent Antiphons, hitherto associated with the traditions of the extreme High Church, but particularly well adapted for Congregational use, especially as here given. The book is beautifully printed, and many of the pieces contained in the work will be found useful to other worshippers than those for whom the book was compiled. The Editors, the Rev. G. S. Barrett and Josiah Booth, have done their work conscientiously and well.

The Lord Reigneth. Psalm xciii. Set to music by Robert Parker Paine. [Novello, Ewer & Co.]

The composer of this work is a Windsor musician, and it was recently performed by the Windsor and Eton Choral Society and very favourably received. Mr. Paine is evidently well versed in the English school of sacred music, and his Psalm would make an extremely effective anthem for festival occasions. It opens with a broad and dignified baritone solo in C, in regular form and almost purely diatonic. No. 2 is a chorus in the dominant key, "Thy throne is established." A flowing theme with florid accompaniment is given out by the soprano, and repeated by the other voices in fugal fashion. The rest of the number, however, is in plain harmony, and like its predecessor it comes to a full close. The next section is also a chorus "The floods have lifted up," very energetic and carried out at great length. In this the composer shows much knowledge of effect, but the many repetitions of one sentence rather tend to monotony, as there is no regular development of the subject-matter. Following this is a brief interlude in the same key, C minor, of no particular significance, though the change to the tonic major near the close is one of the most effective points in the work. No. 5, the final chorus, is in two sections. The first is fugal in character, but at the words "Holiness becometh Thine house," it becomes more quiet and solemn, and so continues to the end. The general style of the music throughout is eminently conservative. If the composer is familiar with modern developments he has not cared to utilise them. This, however, is not to the detriment of the work; in many circles it is likely to be welcomed on that very account.

Two-Part Songs, for Schools. By Herbert Schartau. [Chudleigh Bros.]

Tunefulness and simplicity are essential in music for schools, but these qualities are not incompatible with taste and musicianly feeling. If any proof of this were necessary it is furnished by Mr. Schartau whose songs are noteworthy for pleasing melody, while the well written accompaniment considerably enhances their effect. The words, by Mrs. Hemans and other writers, are suitably chosen. At the end of the book is a musical sketch or brief Cantata, with recitation, suitable for breaking-up parties before Christmas. This may be commended to the notice of teachers as calculated to combine instruction with amusement.

Saint Thomas; a people's Oratorio, or Narrative Anthem. The text selected and arranged by the Rev. J. Powell Metcalfe, M.A. The music composed by N. Kilburn, Mus. Bac., Cantab. [Elton and Co.]

The intention of the composer is in every way praiseworthy. His design is to furnish a work which should appeal at once to an audience to whom music is most pleasing, but for whom the designs of musicians in the use of the complicated and elaborate machinery at their command in the shape of fugues, canons, counterpoint, and other forms of composition, are as dark and dumb shows. He has therefore made his choruses hymn-like in character, and has furnished his solos with melodies as like popular songs as possible. He would still require the services of a trained chorus, or at least one to whom the work had become familiar, for there is much that is altogether over the heads of "the people." Still the work is a distinct improvement of the ordinary unscientific and inartistic hymn-tune oratorios which have attained such a surprising popularity, and it points to a direction which may be profitably pursued in the endeavour to effect changes for the better in the taste of the commonalty. The work is prefaced by an introduction by the Bishop of Durham, which concludes with the words "If this work should have the effect of bringing its lessons home, the composer will indeed have achieved a result for which he will have cause to be thankful."

FOREIGN NOTES.

Extensive preparations have been on foot in musical centres on the Continent for the purpose of commemorating in a worthy manner the centenary of the first production of Mozart's "Don Giovanni," which occurred on the 29th ult., too late for actual record in our present number. Meanwhile, we may state that at Berlin the opera has been newly mounted, and was to have been presented on the day in question in a festive and historically interesting form. At Hamburg, the jubilee performance of Mozart's chef-d'œuvre was to be preceded by the resuscitation of Tirso de Molina's drama of "El burlador de Seville y el convidado de piedra" (in the German rendering of F. Bittong), upon which subsequent treatments of the Spanish legend are founded. After the Spanish play, Molière's "Don Juan" was to be given. At Leipzig, too, Tirso de Molina's play was to have been produced on the eve of the "Don Giovanni" centenary. At Prague, the festival performance of the work was to take place in the Italian language, and in the same theatre in which it first saw the footlights a hundred years since. The proceedings at the Paris Grand Opéra in connection with the event have been for some time past under the management of an influential committee, including the Minister of Fine Arts, MM. Ambroise Thomas and Charles Gounod, and the applications for seats have been so numerous that at least two repetitions of the festive performance have been decided upon. Among the publications which this interesting event has called forth may be mentioned a very able summary of the historical facts concerning the origin, first performances in different parts of the globe, &c., of the work, and entitled "Mozart's 'Don Juan,' 1787—1887," from the pen of Rudolf von Freisauff (Salzburg: H. Kerber). A pianoforte score of "Don Giovanni," with the new German version by Max Kalbeck, has just been published by the firm of A. Gutmann, of Vienna. Kalbeck's version is being much approved of, and will no doubt be extensively used by operatic directors in the Fatherland. Another pianoforte score, described as an édition modèle, carefully revised on the basis of the original manuscript score of the work in the possession of Madame Viardot-Garcia, and preserving intact Da Ponte's libretto, has been issued by M. Heugel, the able editor of the Paris Le Ménestrel. An interesting account of the vicissitudes of the Abbate Da Ponte's life has recently appeared in the columns of the New York Tribune, from the pen of Mr. Krehbiel. An animated portrait of the veteran librettist may be found in an illustrated article relative to the opera in New York, published in the Century of March, 1882.

Gluck's two "Iphigenias," as well as "Armida," have been newly mounted and are to be performed this month at the Dresden Hof-Theater, in commemoration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the death of the great dramatic composer, which occurs on November 15.

The amplification of the score of Weber's posthumous opera "Die drei Pintos" has been completed by Herr Mahler, of Leipzig, and the work is now in course of being mounted at the Leipzig Stadt-Theater. Weber's grandson, the author of the revised libretto of the opera, has addressed an interesting letter to the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, which confirms, in all important points, the observations on the subject contained in our last month's "Notes."

The first appearance, after her recent unfavourable experiences at the Paris Grand Opéra, of Mdlle. Leisinger, at the Berlin Royal Opera last month, was made the occasion of an enthusiastic welcome of the lady on the part of a crowded audience. Mdlle. Leisinger has entered upon a fresh engagement, extending over a number of years, with the Berlin Opera.

A complete Pianoforte Concerto in E minor, from the pen of Franz Liszt, has been discovered (according to the Allgemeine Musik Zeitung) amongst the late pianist-composer's papers, and is just now being studied by Herr Stavenhagen, his pupil. The concerto is superscribed "Malédiction," and is somewhat similar in structure to that in A major of the same composer.

A new double Concerto for violin and violoncello, by Johannes Brahms, is to be produced at the first Gürzenich Concert, of Cologne, this season, the solo executants being Herren Joachim and Hausmann.

A new sacred Oratorio entitled "Ein Tag aus dem Leben des Herrn" (A day from the life of our Lord), by Herr Otto Dienel, the highly esteemed Berlin organist and composer, was performed in the Evangelical Church at Bunzlau, on the 2nd ult., and produced a very favourable impression. One of the features of the performance was the participation of the congregation in the singing of the chorals forming part of the work.

According to the recently published report of the Vienna Conservatorium, the number of pupils frequenting that institution during the past academical year amounted to close upon one thousand.

The Viennese Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde has appointed Herr Eusebius Mandyczewski to the post of librarian in the room of the late C. F. Pohl, the Haydn biographer. Herr Mandyczewski is the editor of the standard edition of the works of Franz Schubert, now in progress (published by Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig), and has moreover undertaken the completion, at the express wish of Herr Pohl, of the final volume of the latter's Haydn biography, the material whereof had been already fully prepared by its industrious author.

Under the ironical heading of "Munificent," the Wiener Fremdenblatt announces the fact of the Court of Common Council of Vienna having just granted a monthly allowance of five florins (eight shillings) to Josefa Lange, a grandniece of Mozart, living in needy circumstances in the Austrian capital.

The Paris municipality have again, as in previous years, offered a prize of 10,000 francs for the best choral and orchestral work, which is to be eventually performed in, and at the expense of, that town. Paris, in this matter, is setting an example which might be imitated with advantage to the art by other European capitals.

M. Massenet's opera "Le Cid," recently performed for the first time in Germany at the Stadt-Theater of Frankfurt, has met with a most favourable reception. The composer was present, and the performance is said to have been excellent.

The personal effects of the late Jacques Offenbach, the celebrated composer of opera-bouffe, were placed under the hammer last month at the Hôtel Drouot, of Paris. The sale attracted no very particular attention, and the prices realised furnish a striking proof of the ephemeral character of the popularity of a composer who was the idol of the Parisians under the Second Empire. Thus the gold-mounted wand with which Offenbach led the orchestra at the first performance of "Orphée aux Enfers" was knocked down for 260 francs. The violoncello, on which he used to play when he first arrived in Paris, fetched 515 francs. His bust, in marble, by Terrier, was sold for 800 francs. Even the laurel crown in silver gilt, presented to Offenbach by the artists of the Gaieté Theatre, was put up to the highest bidder, who had to pay for it only 290 francs. Sic transit gloria mundi!

The performances of Wagner's "Die Walküre" (after the French version of the book by M. Victor Wilder) were resumed last month at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of Brussels, and are meeting with undiminished enthusiasm. M. Dupont conducts the performances.

Signor Ferrari, the spirited South American impresario, has, it is stated in Brazilian papers, arranged with Messrs. Ricordi, of Milan, for the right of performing Verdi's "Otello" both in Brazil and in any of the South American Republics. Signor Ferrari, with a select company of artists, is now on his way to Rio de Janeiro, in which capital "Otello" is to be first produced.

A series of standard operas, including "Don Giovanni," "Freischütz," and "Lohengrin," have recently been produced, for the first time, at Buenos Ayres, by an excellent operatic company under the direction of Herr Emil Durer. We take this opportunity to draw the attention of our readers to a very ably conducted journal, El Mundo Artistico, published for some years past at Buenos Ayres, which is rendering good service to the cause of musical art in South America, the most recent instance thereof being a series of thoughtful analytical articles having reference to, and preceding the performance of, the above-named operatic masterpieces.

The season of Italian opera at the Theatre Royal of Madrid promises to be brilliant this winter, under the auspices of its zealous impresario, Count Michelena. Among the works to be produced are Wagner's "Der fliegende Holländer," Bizet's "Carmen" and "Les Pécheurs de Perles," and Halévy's "La Juive."

Under the title of "Abt Georg Joseph Vogler, sein Leben, Charakter, und musikalisches System," &c., an interesting brochure has just been published at Augsburg, from the pen of the Munich Professor, Herr C. E. von Schafhäutl. In it the author seeks to vindicate the once famous abbé from the oft-repeated charge of charlatanism in matters musical, and to point out the very substantial merits, both as a theorist and a composer, of a highly gifted and versatile musician, whose very name has, however, of late years, been preserved from oblivion merely by the universal fame acquired by his favourite pupils, Meyerbeer and Carl Maria von Weber.

A musico-biographical dictionary of Russian composers, prominent executive artists, and authors, is in course of preparation at St. Petersburg. This will be the first work of the kind ever published in Russia.

A Universal Lexicon of Music and Musicians is about to be published by the firm of Ricordi at Milan, the editor being M. Carl Schmidl, of Trieste. In the existing scarcity of similar literature in the Italian language, the new publication will be looked forward to with interest.

We have received the first number of a new weekly music journal entitled Hamburgische Musik Zeitung, which is intended to meet a long-felt want in the music-loving and music-cultivating Hansa-town from whence it emanates. We wish our young German contemporary every success.

A sum of 70,000 marks has been set apart by the Princess Hohenlohe (the daughter of the friend and testamentary executrix of Franz Liszt, Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein) for the foundation at Weimar of a "Liszt-Stiftung," intended to render pecuniary assistance to young pianists and composers in the pursuit of their studies. The Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar has accepted the protectorate of this excellent institution, which was to have been inaugurated on the 22nd ult., the birthday of the poet-composer whose memory it is intended to honour.

The monument erected over the grave of Franz Liszt by the town of Bayreuth was to have been unveiled on the 22nd ult., the ceremony including the performance of Palestrina's "Stabat Mater," at the express wish of Frau Cosima Wagner, the late pianist-composer's daughter.

A monument was unveiled on the 17th ult., at Pressburg, in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Johann Nepomuk Hummel, the famous composer and pianist, and founder of a school of pianoforte playing of which Thalberg, Henselt, and Ferdinand Hiller were the most distinguished disciples. Hummel himself was a pupil of Mozart, and at the early age of ten attracted the attention of musicians as "a youthful phenomenon" in concert tours extending over Germany, Scandinavia, and England.

A colossal bust, executed in marble, of Richard Wagner, was unveiled on September 25 at Mannheim, the work of the local sculptor, Herr Hoffarth. Much enthusiasm was displayed on the occasion, the festive proceedings concluding with a performance of "Tannhäuser" at the opera.

Rossini is to have a monument erected, at the expense of the Italian Government, in the Church of Santa Croce, of Florence; whilst a statue of Donizetti is to be erected at the composer's native town of Bergamo.

The death is announced, at Paris, last month, of Jules Puget, the once celebrated tenor of the Opéra Comique and the Théâtre Lyrique, aged sixty-seven.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Alton.—The annual Harvest Festival Services at All Saints' were held on September 27. At the evening service the church was crowded to excess, and numbers were unable to obtain admission. The organ was supplemented by an orchestra of nearly twenty performers, and the voluntaries and accompaniments were very effectively given. The opening voluntary was the Overture to the "Occasional" Oratorio, and, in addition to appropriate hymns and special psalms, the service included the Deus Misereatur, sung to the fifth tone, seventh ending; the "Heavens are Telling," with the preceding recitatives for the anthem; Dykes's Te Deum in F, and Stainer's "Sevenfold Amen." The "March of the Priests," from Athalie, was the concluding voluntary. Mr. Henry Piggott, Mus. Bac., Cantab., the Organist, conducted, and was assisted at the organ by Mr. T. Wigley, his pupil.

Arundel.—An evening Concert given on Monday, the 17th ult., by the Messrs. John and Ernest Pitts, sons of the Organist of the Duke of Norfolk, assisted by Miss Ellis Walton (soprano) and by Signor Peruzzi (violoncellist), was an unqualified artistic success. Both young artists were encored after their various selections, and had to return and bow their acknowledgments. Signor Peruzzi, after a finished solo on the violoncello, was awarded a like compliment.

Ashton-under-Lyne.—A Vocal and Instrumental Concert was given in the Albion Lecture Room, on Monday, the 10th ult. Miss Alma Hallowell, a great favourite in this part, was much applauded for her singing of the two solos allotted her, her voice showing also to great advantage in the concerted pieces. Miss Rankin (contralto) was also successful in her songs. Mr. Kendal Thompson being indisposed, his place was very ably filled by Mr. Buckland, whose singing was much admired. Mr. Rickard (bass) was in fine voice, and pleased the audience by his singing. Mr. Lord contributed to the enjoyment of the evening by his rendering of two violin solos. As accompanist, Mr. Mills was all that could be desired.

Barton, Penrith.—The re-opening of the organ and annual Harvest Thanksgiving Festival was held in St. Michael's Parish Church, on the 14th and 16th ult. The service was fully choral. Hopkins's "Lift up your heads" was the Anthem, the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis being Loaring in E, also special Psalms. On the 16th the service was repeated, with Best's Benedicite, and a Communion Service by F. Hodgkinson, the Organist.

Batley.—A special Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held in the Church of St John the Baptist, on the 3rd ult. As in former years, the decorations were on an elaborate scale, and were greatly admired. The musical portion of the service was undertaken by the Organist (Mr. W. Marsden) and choir of the Church of St. Thomas the Apostle. The service was fully choral, after which Mr. W. Marsden gave a Recital on the new organ. The composers drawn upon were Bach, Mendelssohn, Guilmant, and Spark.

Beddington, Surrey.—The Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held at the beautiful Parish Church, on Sunday, the 2nd ult. At the evening service hundreds were unable to gain admission. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise was sung as the Anthem, the accompaniment being performed by Mr. G. C. Burry, Mus. Bac. The solos were excellently rendered by Masters F. Laidlaw and Defty, and Mr. E. Larkins, the principal tenor of the church.

Bedford.—The annual celebration of the harvest took place at the Congregational Church, on Sunday, the 2nd ult. The decorations of the sacred edifice were, as usual, chaste and elegant, bearing witness that neither pains nor skill had been spared in the work of adornment. The Rev. J. L. Phillips, the Pastor, preached at both services. Several beautiful and effective solos were rendered by Mr. Trefelyn David at both the services. A large choir sang two Anthems selected for the occasion. Mr. H. Caledfryn Williams, Organist and Choirmaster, presided at the organ.

Berwick-upon-Tweed.—The annual Harvest Thanksgiving service was held at St. Mary's Church, on the evening of the 6th ult. The church, which was beautifully decorated, was filled in every seat by a large congregation. The service, which was fully choral, included Stainer's Lord's Prayer and Benedictory Amen; the Deus Misereatur in G, by E. J. Crow; and the Anthem, by Stainer, "Ye shall dwell in the land"; the whole of the musical portion of the service being rendered in excellent style by the choir, numbering forty voices, under the direction of Mr. B. Barker, the Organist of the Church.

Bodmin.—The Harvest Festival was held in the fine old Cathedral Church, on Wednesday, September 28. Hymns were sung. Smart's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis (in F) was finely rendered by the choir, likewise the two Anthems "O taste and see" (Sir John Goss) and Handel's "Hallelujah" from The Messiah. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley's fine Anthem "It came even to pass" was creditably sung.——

The Bodmin Association of Church Choirs held their Festival in the above church on the 5th ult. There were about 200 voices which took part in the special service. The service throughout was satisfactory; the choirs sang well; Mr. C. E. Juleff conducted; Miss Kate Rowe ably presided at the organ.

BOLTON.—On the 15th ult., the first of a series of Popular Concerts for the winter months was given in the Town Hall, promoted by a local committee. The St. John's Choir, Broughton, gave a new Cantata entitled Harvest Home, from the pen of Mr. W. Mullineux, F.C.O., the Conductor, and Borough Organist of Bolton, which gave great satisfaction. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous in character.——The second Concert of the series was presented on the 22nd ult., Handel's Judas Maccabæus being rendered by the Eagley Choral Society, under Mr. H. Greg, with Miss G. Kay, Miss Monks, Mr. Haughton, and Mr. Merriman as principals. Everything passed off exceedingly well. On the same day the Health Exhibition was brought to a close, when Miss Athol and Mr. H. Taylor, who had appeared almost nightly for some weeks, were again the vocalists at the entertainment.

BOWDON, CHESHIRE.—The annual Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held in the Wesleyan Church on the 9th ult. The spacious and beautiful building was decorated as usual. Musically, the services were of a high class, the following being a list of the pieces given:—Special Psalms, civ., cxxvi., lxii.; Te Deum. Maybrick in D; Introits, "My voice shalt Thou hear" (Goss), and "Come, ye thankful people," the hymns being the universal favourites upon such occasions; Anthems, "O Lord, how manifold" (J. Barnby) and "While the earth remaineth," from the pen of Mr. D. Colley, the Organist and Choirmaster, a work which gave great pleasure to the vast congregation present, the quartet "He watereth the hills," being rendered in a pleasing manner by a well-balanced set of voices. The Voluntaries were—Pastorale, Guilmant; Offertoires in D and G, Batiste; Adagio, C minor Sonata, and slow movement from Fourth Symphony, Beethoven; March, "Victoria Regina," D. Colley.

BRIGHTON.—Mr. August Buhl gave his second Pianoforte and Organ Recital at Messrs. Cramer, Watts and Co.'s Pianoforte Saloon, West Street, Brighton, on September 26, when the room was well filled by an appreciative audience. He opened the programme with his own "Hymn of Praise." He next played a pianoforte solo, his own arrangement of "God save the Queen." Another pianoforte composition, "La Sirene," also from his own pen, was thoroughly appreciated, the piece characterised by simple but very pleasing melody, being given with facility of execution and artistic expression. The pianist then gave a very effective interpretation of Nos. 1 and 3, Book 1, of Mendelssohn's "Songs without Words," Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, Chopin's "Nocturne in F sharp," and Liszt's "Erl King." The "Victoria March" (Buhl) completed the pianoforte solos, when the Recital terminated with a solo on the organ, "A song of praise," another of Mr. August Buhl's compositions.

BROMLEY, KENT.—The Harvest Festival at St. Luke's Church was held on the 18th ult. (St. Luke's Day), when a large congregation assembled. The choir sang Bunnett's Service in F, and "O Lord, how manifold" (Barnby), for the Anthem. Mr. G. C. Burry, Mus. Bac., of Beddington, presided at the organ, and gave a Recital after the service. Mr. Percy Jackson is the honorary organist, and has done much in working up a good choir in the new church.

BURNGREAVE.—The annual Special Services in connection with the choir of the Wesleyan Chapel were held on the 2nd and 3rd ult., each of the three services being largely attended and the results being highly satisfactory. On Sunday morning the preacher was the Rev. Joseph Dyson, and in the evening the Rev. George Barlow officiated, the latter gentleman also conducting the service on the Monday evening, when he gave a short address on "The relationship which exists between music and Christianity." The choir, which had been carefully prepared by the Organist, Mr. T. E. Speed, sang special anthems at each service. At the close of the last service, Dr. Haydn Keeton, Organist of Peterborough Cathedral, gave a Recital on the organ of the following pieces:—Prelude and Fugue in C minor (Bach), Caprice in B flat (Guilmant), Chorale, with variations (Smart), Allegretto (Lemmens), Adagio (Merkel), March in C (Spohr).

BURNLEY.—A lecture on "Handel and his Works" was delivered in Brunswick Chapel, on September 24, by Mr. W. Whitehead, Manchester. The musical illustrations were successfully undertaken by Miss Horner and friends of the choir, which was augmented for the occasion.——In the Council Chamber, on September 27, the Burnley Literary and Scientific Club inaugurated their winter session by a Musical Soirée. Favourite songs were well rendered by Rev. A. B. Edelstone and Mr. E. Hartley. Miss Charlotte Simpson's pianoforte solo was warmly applauded.——The Parish Church Harvest Festival commenced on September 29 (St. Michael and All Angels). The Festival of the Rural Deanery Choral Association followed on the 1st ult., when 250 choristers assembled, under the bâton of Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank, Mus. Bac., Oxon. The music for all the services was prepared by him. The Harvest Services, continued to the 2nd ult., were very numerously attended.——The Vocal Union met on the 5th ult., under Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank. The Revenge and The Bride are in preparation for the Christmas Concert.——In connection with Pickup Croft Schools (Parish Church), the Rev. A. B. Edelstone has trained a number of children to give a varied entertainment of vocal and instrumental selections. These small minstrels have been well received, and Mr. Edelstone's efforts to provide attractive evenings for those in his charge have been very successful.——The Fulledge Schools string band gave a Concert on the 10th ult., when the orchestral numbers were well rendered, and Crowe's "Gypsies' Waltz" was sung by thirty of the scholars.——At the Harvest Festival, held in Holy Trinity Church on the 16th ult., an attractive item was a short Recital before Evensong of selections from the new Oratorio, The Garden of Olivet (Bottesini).

CANTERBURY.—A series of Organ Recitals has been commenced and will be given on alternate Thursdays and Wednesdays, in Canterbury Cathedral. Dr. Henry T. Pringuer, F.C.O. (Organist of St. Mary's, Stoke Newington), Mr. J. Hopkins, Organist of Rochester Cathedral, and others, have assisted in the work. All the seats are free, but a collection is made in aid of the fund for the completion of the pedal organ.

CATTERICK.—The annual Harvest Thanksgiving Services at Catterick Church were held on Thursday, the 6th ult., when the sacred edifice was most artistically decorated with corn, fruit, and flowers, by several members of the congregation. The service was fully choral, and included Stainer's "Ye shall dwell in the land" and a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis by Dr. Garrett. The hymns and psalms chosen were very appropriate, and were most ably sung. In the evening the beautiful new organ, built by Messrs. Foster and Andrews, of Hull, was opened. The annual Christmas performance of The Messiah (Handel) will be given at the second Concert on December 29.

CLIFTON, BEDS.—The usual Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held in All Saints' Church on Thursday, the 6th ult. The services were choral. His programme included compositions by Scotson Clark, Beethoven, Hewlett, Haydn, Forbes, Braga, Handel, Schubert, and Meyerbeer.

DEMERARA.—On September 15 a new Cantata, "Under the Palms," was performed at Trinity Chapel, Werk-en-Reste, and on Friday following Mr. W. R. Colbeck gave an Organ Recital of Festival music at St. Philip's Church, after the evening service. A Jubilee Concert was given, under the direction of Mr. W. R. Colbeck, on the 16th, in the Philharmonic Hall. His Excellency the Governor and many high officials were present, and the whole of the front seats were filled by a well-dressed company. There was also a very good muster of the Society's choir, a small orchestra, and some six soloists. Selections from Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's "Jubilee Ode," with the part-song, "The Empire Flag," and other patriotic pieces were performed, together with pieces from Sir Arthur Sullivan's operas, selections from Chopin and Meyerbeer, Purcell's "Come, if you dare," Caldicott's new Jubilee song, "The Queen, God bless her," and a new Jubilee chorus, "Great Britain's sons and daughters," by Dr. J. C. Bridge, all showing a very laudable ambition to make the Concert as thoroughly characteristic of the occasion as possible, and to give really national and truly patriotic music the prominence it deserves.

DINGWALL, N.B.—A highly successful amateur Concert, in aid of the College Hospital, was given here on Monday evening, the 3rd ult. Sir Kenneth Mackenzie, Bart., of Gairloch, Lord Lieutenant of the County, presided, and there was a large and fashionable audience. Julia, Marchioness of Tweeddale, was among the performers, and appeared twice in the programme in excerpts from the works of Beethoven. The quartet playing of four ladies, Mrs. and Miss Davidson, of Tulloch, Miss Ross, and Mrs. Binning, was greatly admired. Miss Watt, of Inverness, was heard to special advantage in several songs, one of which was the old Scotch Ballad "My heart is sair for somebody." Mr. Gordon and Mr. Wallace also contributed songs, and the accompaniments were played by Miss Ross, Mrs. Davidson, Mrs. Binning, and Mrs. Mackenzie.

DUNDALK.—The eighth annual Choir Festival Service in connection with the union of the Louth choirs, was held in the Parish Church of St. Nicholas, Dundalk, on St. Matthew's Day. The choirs which took part were Dundalk, Drogheda, Dunleer, Ballymascanlan, Castlebellingham, and Drumcar. The voices, numbering about 120, sung the music admirably. The service included music by Boyton Smith, Barnby, &c. After the offertory, which was given to the Diocesan Fund for Poor Parishes, the Organist, Mr. Dry, gave an Organ Recital, which afforded much pleasure to his hearers.

DUNDEE.—The Dundee Amateur Choral Union, which attains the thirtieth year of its active existence in January next, has again commenced work, the services of Mr. Carl Drechsler Hamilton having been secured as Conductor. The programme for the season is—21st December, Handel's Judas Maccabæus, with Madame Nordica, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. R. Grice as solo vocalists; on February 3, 1888, Mendelssohn's Lobgesang and Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's Story of Sayid, with Miss Mary Davies, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Fred. King as soloists. This will be, we understand, the first performance of Dr. Mackenzie's work in Scotland. The accompaniment at both Concerts will be played by the orchestra of the Glasgow Choral Union. The Dundee Glee Choir give their usual number of Concerts, under Mr. Scroggie's conductorship, and the Choral and Orchestral Society give The Messiah at Christmas, and the Creation later on. The orchestral branch of this Society is formed chiefly by amateurs.

Enniskillen.—Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held in the Parish Church on Sunday, the 16th ult. At Matins the Service was Clark Whitfeld's in E major, and the Anthem, Barnby's "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works." At Evensong, Clarke Whitfeld's Service in E was continued, special Psalms being sung to chants by Boyce, Barnby, and Lawes respectively. On Monday, the 17th, the services were resumed (full choral), when the organ and church choir were augmented by the military band and choir of the 16th Regiment. Stainer's Service in A was performed, and as an Anthem, Stainer's Creed in D. The effect of the trombones in the initiatory phrase of the Anthem, and the whole force of the organ, band, and combined choirs in the forte passages were very fine, and created a profound impression on the crowded congregation. Mr. Matthew Arnold presided at the organ.

Eynesbury, Bedfordshire.— Tuesday evening, September 27, a large congregation assembled in the Parish Church to celebrate the Harvest Thanksgiving. The choral part of the service was well performed by the large and highly trained choir under the direction of Mr. Jennings, the Organist and Choirmaster. It included Mr. Loaring's new Festival Anthem "Awake up, my glory," Dr. Stainer's "Te Deum," and special hymns. The floral decorations of the church were pretty and tasteful. The offertory was on behalf of the County Hospital.

Gosport.—The members of the Philharmonic Society gave their first Concert of the season in the Thorngate Hall, on September 27. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise was rendered in a commendable manner. The principals engaged for the occasion were Mrs. Grahame-Coles, soprano; Miss E. Francis, mezzo-soprano; Mr. Harry Love, tenor; Mr. H. Siebert, baritone. Miss Rogers accompanied on the pianoforte and Miss Batchelor on the American organ. The chorus numbered about sixty voices. The second part of the Concert was of a miscellaneous character, and included two national part-songs, "Awake, oh happy morning," and "The Empire Flag." Mr. Hunter, the Conductor, accompanied the vocalists in a tasteful and appropriate manner.

Halstead, Essex.—The organ in Holy Trinity Church, which has just been rebuilt and enlarged by Mr. A. Kirkland, of Holloway Road, N., was formally re-opened on Tuesday, the 4th ult., by Mr. E. H. The church was crowded.

Hamilton, N.B.—A Harvest Thanksgiving Service in aid of the Choir Fund was given on Sunday, the 16th ult., in St. Mary's Episcopal Church, which was beautifully decorated with fruits and flowers by the ladies of the congregation. The Te Deum and Jubilate were Stainer in E flat, and the Anthem, by a young Scotch student, Alfred Moffat, showed a decided advance on his former compositions. The evening service was fully choral, and was also Stainer in E flat. The Anthem was by Berthold Tours. The choir was under the direction of Mr. Hood, the Organist.

Jersey.—A very successful Concert was given by Mr. William Nicholl, at the Oddfellows' Hall, Jersey, on Friday, the 7th ult. He was ably assisted by Miss Eva Harrison and Professor Edmond Savary d'Odiardi. The programme was carefully selected, and calculated to show off the powers of each artist to the best advantage. The audience was highly appreciative, and as the evening wore on their applause became very enthusiastic. Mr. Nicholl was repeatedly encored, as was Miss Eva Harrison, who gave, amongst other excellent items, a song entitled "Marguerite," with vivacity and grace, while Professor Edmond Savary d'Odiardi's compositions, which he performed on the Mustel organ, lent a special charm to the whole Concert.

Leamington.—On the 5th ult., the first Concert of the season was given at Leamington by Mr. Piercy Watson, who secured the services of the marvellous child-pianist, little Josef Hofmann. The little wonder held spellbound one of the largest audiences ever "drawn" by a Concert to the Public Hall. His selections included a duet with his father, by Kalkbrenner, Variations by Rameau, three pieces of his own composing, a Gavotte by Pirani, and a Mazurka and Valse by Chopin, in all of which his delicate "touch," perfect phrasing, and truly wonderful expression, added to the execution of a finished adult pianist, fairly electrified his hearers. In addition to little Josef, Mr. Piercy Watson also engaged Miss May Goode, Miss Elise Seegers, and Mr. E. J. Bloomfield, who, with himself, were responsible for the vocal portion of the programme.——The annual Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held in the Parish Church, Leamington Spa, on the 8th and 9th ult. The choir was led by two trumpeters. The Anthem, written expressly for the occasion by the Organist, Mr. Frank Spinney, consisted of an opening chorus, "O sing unto the Lord," followed by a treble solo, "He maketh peace," and concluding with a Finale, "O that men would therefore praise the Lord," in which the hymn, "Come, ye thankful people, come," is introduced as a climax. The Anthem was most effectively rendered, and the whole service was hearty in the extreme.——The Musical Society gave a Classical Chamber Concert in the new Town Hall on the 12th ult. The artists were Mr. Fred. Ward (solo violin), Mr. A. J. Priestley (solo violoncello), and Mr. Frank Spinney (pianoforte). Trios by Götz and Mendelssohn, a duet by Vieuxtemps, and solos by Ries, Ernst, and Payne, were given by the instrumentalists. The vocalist was Madame Antoinette Sterling, who sang six songs by Liszt, Brahms, Rubinstein, Sullivan, Mackenzie, and Parry, in her own incomparable style. The Concert was a complete success, financially as well as musically. We regret to learn that the Musical Society, which has done such good work in the past, will be broken up, owing to the ill-health of the Conductor, Mr. Frank Spinney, who has been ordered to spend the winter in Africa.——The Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held at St. Alban's Church on Thursday evening, the 13th ult., when an augmented choir, consisting of sixty voices, under the direction of Mr. E. Roberts West, the Organist, sang the following Anthems: Hallelujah Chorus (Handel); Air, sung by Mrs. Birch, "I will extol thee"; Chorus, "God and King," from Eli (Costa). After the service, Mr. E. Roberts West gave an Organ Recital, consisting of the following "Nazareth" (Gounod), Andante in F (Smart), Fantaisie (Bach), "War March of the Priests" (Mendelssohn). The Anthems were repeated at the services on the following Sunday. On the occasion of the Volunteer Church Parade at Matins on Sunday, the 23rd, a special Military Service was held. The Anthem was "From the rising of the sun" (Ouseley).

Leicester.—At St. John's Church, a Special Musical Service was held on Sunday afternoon, the 9th ult., in connection with the Harvest Festival, when the Anthem was Dr. C. J. Frost's "Come, ye thankful people, come," which is founded on Sir G. J. Elvey's tune St. George. It is treated in various ways, and finally gives the congregation an opportunity of joining, which they did on this special occasion with evident zeal and enjoyment. Dr. Stainer's Daughter of Jairus was also performed at the same service. The whole of the direction of the music fell upon Mr. A. W. Parsons, Organist of the Church.——The Golden Legend was given at the Temperance Hall on the 20th ult. The leading instrumentalists were all from London, and the principal vocalists—Madame Nordica (as Elsie), Madame Patey (as Ursula), Mr. Sidney Tower (as the Prince), and Mr. Fred. Bevan (as Lucifer), did ample justice to the solo music. The honours of the evening undoubtedly fell to the ladies. The chorus never sung better. The unaccompanied choruses, "O gladsome Light" and "O pure in heart," were given with a purity of intonation and attention to light and shade which it would be hard to excel. The male voice Chorus of Pilgrims in scene four was also particularly well sung, while the epilogue brought the Concert to a really brilliant end. Praise for an excellent performance should be given to the painstaking and popular Conductor, Mr. H. B. Ellis.——The first Popular Concert (second series) in connection with the Leicester Temperance Society was given, under the direction of Mr. J. Addison Adcock, on the 22nd ult. The vocalists were Miss Katherine James, London; Mr. W. H. Lowe, and the Leicester Vocal Octette: Miss Annie Dent, Miss Annie Gordon, Miss Maud Harding, Miss Hattie Jones, Mr. A. Page, Mr. W. H. Lowe, Mr. R. C. Allen, and Mr. D. McAlpin. Miss Ada Molteno, London, was solo violinist; Mr. J. T. Dewick, solo flute; Miss Marion Jones, Miss Newton, Miss Stafford, and Mr. J. Garner, officiated as accompanists. There was also a full band of 124 performers.

Limerick.—On the evenings of Thursday and Friday, the 6th and 7th ult., a very successful comic opera, entitled The Maypole, was performed for the first time in the Theatre Royal. The work is written by a gentlemen who takes the nom de plume of "C. Bruce Wade," and is composed by our talented fellow-citizen, Mr. Stanislaus Elliott. The high favour with which the performance was regarded points to a successful career for an interesting and cleverly conceived work.

Londonderry.—An Organ Recital was given in St. Columb's Cathedral, on Monday evening, the 10th ult., by Mr. D. C. Jones, Mus. Bac., F.C.O., when the following programme was performed:—Offertoire in A flat (Batiste), Lento in B flat minor (Henselt), Allegro in F sharp minor (Guilmant), Concerto in G (Handel), March (Guilmant), Romanza (Haydn), Toccata and Fugue in D minor (Bach), Marche Cortège (Gounod). During the Recital, Mr. Cattley sang with great taste "If with all your hearts" and "In native worth," from the Creation.

Manchester.—The winter session of the Manchester Tonic Sol-fa Society was inaugurated on Saturday evening, the 8th ult., by a meeting held in the Lecture Hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, under the presidency of H. J. Talbot, Esq., the Chairman of the Council. An interesting paper on "Music and Musicians" was read by Mr. John Wrigley, who traced the many developments which had taken place in the art from its infancy up to the present time, and the part which had been borne in them by the various masters. The points of the paper were brought into stronger relief by means of both instrumental and vocal illustrations, the latter being performed by a select choir.

New Seaham.—On Sunday, the 2nd ult., the Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held at Christ Church, New Seaham, when there were numerous congregations present. The interior of the church was tastefully decorated. The adornments of the altar were generally very beautiful, and many appropriate texts were suspended on the walls. In the morning the Rev. T. Boutflower, of Newbottle, was the preacher; in the afternoon, the Rev. Canon Scott, Vicar of the Parish; and in the evening, the Rev. T. F. Patterson, of New Herrington. The service was fully choral. The Anthem was the 150th Psalm, "O praise God in His holiness," the composition of Mr. Birkbeck, the Organist and Choirmaster.

Northwich.—A Festival of Choirs was held on Tuesday, September 28, in the Great Budworth Parish Church. Eight choirs were represented, making a total of nearly 200 voices. The service included music by Lissant, Stainer, Goss, and Caleb Simper. The Rev. H. Ash, Vicar of Appleton, conducted, and Mr. Percy W. Mathers, Organist of the Church, presided at the organ, which has lately been enlarged by Messrs. Young and Son, of Manchester. There was a crowded congregation, and the offertory was in aid of the funds of the Great Budworth Choral Association, under whose auspices the festival was held.

Norwich.—The Norfolk and Norwich Gospel Temperance and Blue Ribbon Union gave, on the 22nd ult., a special Concert in St. Andrew's Hall, when Sir Peter Eade presided. The vocalists were Miss Luckett, Miss Callingham Moore, and Mr. D. Sutton Shepley all of whom were highly appreciated.

Perth.—A most successful Organ Recital and Sacred Concert was given on the 4th ult., in the Middle Parish Church, by Mr. Edward Nicol, assisted by the choir of the church and others. The high state of efficiency displayed by the choir showed careful training. Mr. T. B. Nicol was the solo vocalist.

PULBOROUGH.—An excellent Concert was given here on the 3rd ult. by the church choir, assisted by several ladies and gentlemen of the neighbourhood. The glees and part-songs were remarkably well sung, under the conductorship of Mr. Seymour Kelly, of Chichester Cathedral, who was ably assisted in the work of preparation by the Rev. R. W. Beresford. Mrs. Seymour Kelly sang with marked success, and Miss Rutherford presided at the pianoforte with much ability.

ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.—The Harvest Festival celebrations at St. Paul's Church, St. Leonard's, took place on the 13th ult., morning and evening. At the latter service the Hymn of Praise was sung by the choir and the Choral Union, under the direction of Dr. Abram, Miss Adelaide Mullen, Miss Kelsall, Mr. C. U. Simson, and Mr. W. Chesterfield undertaking the concerted parts. Miss Mullen sang splendidly the solo, "Praise thou the Lord, O my soul," and joined with Miss Kelsall in the duet, "I waited for the Lord," and with Mr. Chesterfield in "My song shall be of Thy loving-kindness." Messrs. Chesterfield and Simson did remarkably well, and the skilful organ playing of Mr. E. Kennard left nothing to be desired.

STRADBROKE.—An Organ Recital was given in Stradbroke Parish Church, Suffolk, on Sunday evening, the 2nd ult., by Mr. Ben Cogswell. This is the third Recital that the young organist has given in this church while on a visit to Stradbroke, and his playing has been greatly admired by the parishioners. The following was the programme:—Sonata (No. 4), Mendelssohn; Andante in G (by request), Batiste; Prelude and Fugue in G, J. S. Bach; Offertoire (No. 2), Wély; Variations on "God save the Queen," Rink.

SWANSCOMBE, KENT.—In All Saints' Church a Harvest Festival was held on Sunday, the 9th ult. Special Psalms from the Cathedral Psalter were sung. In the morning, Te Deum in F, Smart; Anthem, "Ye shall dwell in the land," Dr. Stainer. In the evening, Bunnet's Service in F and Dykes's Te Deum in F. The service, which was fully choral, was well rendered. The Organist, Mr. J. H. Jarvis, played several voluntaries. The church was very tastefully decorated with fruit and flowers of the best kind, and a crowded congregation attended at each service.

WALLINGFORD.—At the Free Library, on the 5th ult., on the occasion of a Concert given by Messrs. J. S. Liddle and F. A. Clarke, a Quintet for strings, by Mozart, was played by Mr. Liddle, Misses E. Fife, Arkwright, Fife, and Blunt, who also gave a capital pizzicato Gavotte, composed by Miss Arkwright. The other instrumental concerted pieces were Haydn's Variations on the Austrian Hymn; an Allegro by Bach for two violins and piano, played with great spirit and vigour by Miss E. Fife and Messrs. Liddle and Clarke; and a Sonata of Mozart's for violin and piano, played by the Concert-givers. Among the vocalists, Miss Dorothy Garthe deserves first mention. She sings in excellent style, evincing the careful training she has received. Mr. C. Bonelle, Mr. J. C. Allen, the Misses Fife, with the addition of Miss Arkwright, sang Pinsuti's "In this hour," the bright little Quartet, "Around, around," from Barnett's Ancient Mariner, and several of Brahms's Liebeslieder Waltzes, Messrs. Liddle and Clarke taking the piano duet part. Mr. Liddle played some violin solos and Mr. F. A. Clarke accompanied throughout the evening.

WATERFORD.—On Sunday, the 9th ult., the annual Harvest Thanksgiving Services took place at this church. The services, both morning and evening, opened with the Hymn "Come, ye thankful people, come." The Service selected was Jackson in F, the Kyrie being the composition of the Organist (Mr. Charles Davies). The Anthem was "O give thanks unto the Lord" (Sydenham). The whole of the music was exceedingly well rendered by the organist and augmented choir. The Voluntaries were Offertoire in G (Collin), Communion (Clark), Adagio in D (Cramer), and Jude's Festival March. The Bishop was the preacher at morning service.

WHITEHAVEN.—On Friday, September 30, a Concert was given in the Oddfellows' Hall by the members of Holy Trinity Church Choir. There was a large audience. Dr. Stainer's Cantata, The Daughter of Jairus, formed the first part of the programme, and the second part consisted of a miscellaneous selection. The Cantata was well rendered, the solos being taken by members of the choir. Mr. W. H. Bates, Organist and Choirmaster of Holy Trinity Church, conducted.

BACH, J. S.—"The Organ Works." Edited by J. F. BRIDGE, Mus. Doc., Oxon., and JAMES HIGGS, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Book VII. Preludes and Fugues. 3s.

The Seventh Book contains several of Bach's most masterly Organ Works. The great A minor Prelude and Fugue, the lovely B minor Prelude and Fugue, and the majestic C minor Prelude and Fugue are included, together with two that are less well known: a Prelude and Fugue in C major, a brilliant work; and the Prelude and Fugue in G major (Prelude in 3-2 time). This work has, perhaps, suffered in popularity from the fact of its having hitherto been set out in a somewhat crowded manner, a defect that has been remedied in this Edition. Valuable suggestions are as usual given for the treatment of the several works.

THE

AN ORATORIO COMPOSED BY

GEO. SHINN, MUS. BAC., CANTAB.

The work is suitable for Concert Room or Church. Price 2s. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the author of several Cantatas and other compositions, all of which are written in a style at once musicianly and popular. 'The Captives of Babylon' may be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas. The work contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety. Choral Societies, which desire an interesting and moderately easy work to perform, will do well to select this Oratorio. It will well repay the time spent in its preparation, and will be sure to take."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"The music is appropriate, interesting, melodious, and but of moderate difficulty. The work is one of Mr. Shinn's best efforts, and we all know that Mr. Shinn has written some charming music. We heartily recommend this Oratorio to Choral Societies."—Essex County Chronicle.

"'The Captives of Babylon' will be found a welcome addition to the répertoires of Choral Societies and Church Choirs."—The Musical World.

JOAN OF ARC

AN HISTORICAL AND DRAMATIC CANTATA

WORDS BY

FREDERICK ENOCH

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; for, although its subject is so different, it is laid down very much upon the same lines, and contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."—Birmingham Daily Times.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. The music displays more skilful workmanship than any music we have received from the same hands. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Now with matured experience and ripened scholarship he gives to the town which has received and welcomed his first triumphs his magnum opus, 'Joan of Arc.'"—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"The Cantata, from the first bar to the last, is rich in melody, beautiful harmonic combinations, and clever orchestration. The beautiful 'Ave Maria' is a splendid example of pure and fervent church music, but there are so many exquisite points of merit in Mr. Gaul's latest work that they hardly need detailing. Taking the work as a whole, it bids fair to become a great favourite with all choral societies."—Birmingham Weekly Post.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."—Manchester Guardian.

"The music from beginning to end is of the highest order, both in form, construction, dramatic expression, and religious colouring. Particularly beautiful is the great wealth of melody, which carries with it the impression that it is the outcome of the inspiration and genius of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.' . . . 'Joan of Arc' is one of the most melodious, refined, and expressive works that has come under our notice."—Huddersfield Examiner.

Price, paper covers, 2s. 6d.; ditto, boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100. (Ent. Sta. Hall.)

The gratuitous loan of Instrumental Parts may be had on application to the Composer, and full liberty is given to perform this Cantata and to insert the words in any programme without further permission.

WORKS BY THE LATE FRANCIS HOWELL.

THE CAPTIVITY

AN ORATORIO

Twice performed by the Festival Choral Society in the Town Hall, Birmingham, with 300 performers. First performance March 13, 1862.

"The Soothsayers declare their inability to expound the dream in a majestic chorus, 'There is not a man,' both the melody and accompaniment of which are highly picturesque and suggestive. The chorus 'To whom thou hast spoken' contains some graphic passages, and the succeeding recitative for soprano, 'Behold, the day's come,' will yield to none for sustained interest, breadth, and melodic beauty. An exceedingly florid and trying soprano air, 'O ye angels of the Lord'; a majestic chorus, led off by the basses, 'O all ye powers of the Lord'; and a jubilant tenor air, 'Rejoice ye with Jerusalem,' which for brilliancy and difficulty may vie with the soprano bravura last mentioned, conduct to the concluding double chorus 'O give thanks unto the Lord,' a fitting conclusion in ingenuity of construction and massive grandeur of effect to so excellent a work."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"It is in part-writing that the strength of the new composer lies, and in this he may fairly claim equality with some who stand high in the art-world, and who have acquired European fame. There was enough so palpably good as to demand an expression of our belief that Mr. Howell has at once taken a high position as a composer of no ordinary intelligence and musical acquirements, and that the entire audience and orchestra came to the same opinion, the ovation which he received from both at the conclusion was ample proof."—Midland Counties Herald.

"'These men, O King,' is written with an ease and neatness which is generally the result of long study, and is evidently the work of a musician who possesses the quality of perspicuity in a high degree. The double chorus, 'Blessed art thou,' was a good example of musical skill. The broad massive phrasing of the chorus, notwithstanding the vigorous brass accompaniment, made an impression that was responded to by a large meed of applause. The orchestral writing and accompaniments challenge an amount of attention and admiration which it would be difficult to rival, as they are not, as is sometimes the case, a mere copy of the delicacy of the Mendelssohnian style. There appears in this respect a vigorous originality, which speaks openly of the talent of the writer."—Aris's Birmingham Gazette.

"The choruses are capital—well written and effective—perhaps rather too Handelian sometimes, but still reflecting on you the highest credit."—Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley.

For full critiques on the first performance of this work, in all the Birmingham papers, apply to Miss S. P. Howell, Newport, Barnstaple.

NOTES AND NOTIONS ON MUSIC

A Series of Short Essays and Critiques

By N. KILBURN, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

ROYAL 16MO, BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES, PRICE 2S.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We have pleasure in noticing this collection of critical essays upon composers and their works—by one who evidently is thoroughly practical and conversant with the works of the great masters, past and present. The title-page and cover of the book bear the impress of the well-known sword motive in Wagner's 'Ring des Nibelungen,' and may fairly be taken as an index of the high tone of the work, as it is evidently intended it should be. Some of the criticisms are not quite new to us, though to be reminded of them is interesting, while others are very original, and are the result of a wide knowledge and diligent study. Writing of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' the author thinks that this oratorio is 'a marked example of the theory upon which the sometimes derided Wagner so strongly insisted,' and that only by the union of the arts—poetry, music, and the drama—can we have a complete and satisfying Art. This is correct enough, though Beethoven has gone even further in this direction. And as the works of Wagner are getting better known in this country, we may hope that the union of these arts will be cultivated by our English composers. The author discusses many high-class works, too numerous to particularise in this brief notice, which are well worth perusal. A chapter is devoted to 'How to Manage a Choral Society'—a vexed question the author has had some experiences about, which will be found of considerable value to aspiring conductors of musical societies. The volume is handy in size, well bound, and the text is well printed."—Literary World.

"This attractive little volume is a collection of short essays and critiques, written in a chatty and unaffected style. They are the outcome of the author's practical experience, and reflect his impressions upon many points of interest concerning musical works and their authors and interpreters. It is a companionable book, to be taken up in leisure moments, for the perusal of ideas and fancies of a cultured musician. It is no easy matter to descant upon such topics as Handel's 'Messiah,' Haydn's 'Creation,' Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' and Gounod's 'Redemption,' without being trite, but Mr. Kilburn has contrived to do this. Among the interesting features of the work are examples of unconscious plagiarisms by eminent composers. Of course the list of such examples might be much extended, for certain it is that the greatest and most original have indulged in these mutual exchanges. In this connection the author recalls Schiller's happy reply when charged with borrowing a phrase, 'I did but take leather to make my boots.' We have not space, though tempted, to linger over this suggestive little work. There is a chapter containing some useful hints "How to Manage a Choral Society"; some humorous anecdotes, also, of musical celebrities find a place."—Musical Standard.

"Mr. Kilburn has the courage of his opinions, and those opinions are based on a sound knowledge and high ideal of his theme. . . . A musician and composer of no mean order himself, his soul is amenable to all that is true and beautiful in the art, as his mind is accessible, whatever be the time or nationality."—Vienna Weekly News.

"Mr. Kilburn's 'Notes and Notions on Music' consists of some twenty very short essays on musical topics and criticisms of musical compositions. They are earnestly and suggestively written, and issued in a prettily printed volume, which should find favour with those interested in the discussion of musical questions."—Scotsman.

"It is an elegantly got up book. The first portion of Mr. Kilburn's book is devoted to the essays, and his notes on 'The Messiah,' 'Creation,' and other standard oratorios are always interesting. He is also warmly sympathetic regarding our native composers, and some of his notes, evidently written some time since, read a little curiously by the light of later events. For instance, his anticipations respecting Frederick Corder's opera have only partially been realised, although it is probable, when the history of the composition of 'Nordisa' is written, the composer will not be found much in fault. . . . The bonne bouche of the work, 'How to Manage a Choral Society.' This last and longest article should be read by every provincial conductor or member of a choral society. Mr. Kilburn speaks with authority."—Newcastle Leader.

"The author of these 'notes' says that they are the outcome of practical experience, rather than the ideas of a mere student. He has taken advantage of his opportunities, and has given the result of the observations he has made upon some of the more important of the musical compositions which find favour in our day. He writes thoughtfully, and shows no slight acquaintance with most of the topics he handles, and his book will prove pleasant and suggestive reading. We must call more particular attention to the concluding and longest section, 'How to Manage a Choral Society,' which contains a series of valuable practical hints on all the details and arrangements."—The Queen.

"Mr. Kilburn's little book is very tastefully 'got up,' and constitutes an interesting addition to musical literature. It is written by a musical scholar of wide experience and general culture, a man withal who is full of enthusiasm, poetry, and ideal tendencies. If Mr. Kilburn has a fault it is that he is hardly matter-of-fact enough. But whatever he writes is interesting and instructive, and we could wish to see him both write and compose on a more extensive scale than he has been in the habit of doing."—Sunderland Daily Post.

"Mr. Kilburn's work, happily preserved in a casket worthy of the contents, covers a wide range of topics distinctly and purely musical."—Auckland Chronicle.

SAINT THOMAS

A PEOPLE'S ORATORIO OR NARRATIVE ANTHEM

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

N. KILBURN, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

WITH A PREFATORY NOTICE SPECIALLY WRITTEN FOR THIS WORK BY

THE RT. REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF DURHAM (DR. LIGHTFOOT).

HIS LORDSHIP WRITES AS FOLLOWS:—

"The highest efforts of music, as of painting and of architecture, in the past have been religious. It must be the aim of all those who have the highest interests of their fellow men at heart, to see that this union between music and religion is maintained and strengthened. The severance would be a grave calamity to both alike. Religion would be deprived of a most valuable handmaid; and music would be cut off from the sources of its highest inspiration. A composer, therefore, who strikes out a new line, and gives a wider range to religious music, deserves our warmest thanks.

"The present work is intended by the composer to occupy a position midway between the ordinary Anthem and the Oratorio. At the same time it is distinguished from the so-called 'Service of Song,' which usually consists of a number of detached and often irrelevant pieces, by its unity of conception and plan. By entitling it a 'People's Oratorio,' he wishes to signify that, while he has striven to make the music sufficiently interesting to engage the earnest attention of the performers, he has been careful to avoid abstruseness and intricacy. It has been his endeavour, from a musical point of view, to satisfy modern ideas of dramatic propriety, without introducing anything which could stand in the way of its comprehension by an ordinary sympathetic audience.

"May I express my own conviction that by a free adoption of this mode of treatment, the value of music, as a religious teacher, may be very greatly extended? The incidents and characters of the Bible furnish inexhaustible materials for efforts in this direction; and the words selected in the present instance to express the ideas which the composer desires to interpret through music, seem to me to fulfil their purpose so admirably that they may well serve as a model for this class of composition."

(Signed) "J. B. DUNELM.

No. 4. WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED THEIR FLOCKS.
5. GOOD CHRISTIANS ALL, REJOICE.
6. GOD BLESS YOU ALL, GOOD GENTLEMEN.

"Mr. Sawyer's Carols are as quaint and 'full of Christmas' as any we have seen for a long time. The store is large, but it cannot be too large so long as the quality is kept up, and these six are certainly first rate."—Musical Standard.

"Praise must be awarded these fine conceptions. They display originality and good taste, on ground somewhat well trodden, and where temptations towards familiarity are not wanting. The best of the series are perhaps the pious lullaby, 'Rocking so slowly,' and the quaint strain, 'The Three wise Kings of the Rhine.'"—S. Cecilia Magazine.

"May be heartily recommended as graceful and musicianly productions."—Saturday Review.

"Those in search of new Christmas Carols may be recommended to try a set of six by F. J. Sawyer. These are bright and piquant two-part ditties, with a pleasant and appropriate touch of quaintness in the melodies and harmonies."—Weekly Dispatch.

B. LÜTGEN.

YE SPOTTED SNAKES. FAIRY SONG AND LULLABY. From "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Two-part Song. Net 4d.

"This fairy song and lullaby is a simple and melodious setting of Shakespeare's well-known lyric in 'A Midsummer Night's Dream.' The melody is quite of the Italian type, and the accompaniment interesting though unpretentious. Mr. Lütgen's work may be commended as a useful addition to the repertory of schools and singing-classes."—Monthly Musical Record.

"It is difficult to avoid reminiscences of the many settings of 'Ye spotted snakes'; but the composer of the one before us has not only accomplished this task, but has given us a remarkably fresh and sympathetic colouring to Shakespeare's beautiful lines. Commencing with a placid and tuneful solo, the lullaby is written in two parts, to be sung as a duet or chorus, the accompaniment being aided, when it can be procured, by the toy instrument in imitation of the Nightingale. The song will, however, be almost equally effective with the trill upon the pianoforte."—Musical Times.

C. T. WEST.

ADVANCE, BRITANNIA. CHORAL MARCH. Net 4d.

"Composed for the Grand Colonial Procession in the Dome Entertainment of the Brighton Grammar School. Mr. West's Choral March is in every respect excellently suited for its intended purpose. Easy to sing, extremely melodious, and unaffectedly harmonised, we can imagine that it will linger in the memory of the school-boys long after the occasion for which it was written has passed away."—Musical Times.

"It is for Treble Voices in one and two parts, and must have been most effective in its place at the Dome."—The Girls' Own Paper.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

"CONCERNING SOME DEAD."

(G. A. MACFARREN—JENNY LIND-GOLDSCHMIDT.)

THERE has been of late what Shakespeare calls "a passing through nature to eternity" among musicians. One after another has left us for the silent land, and the survivors, calling to mind a cherished companionship, high achievements, or a noble example, have need to summon all their philosophic fortitude. Nay, they must desire to look upon death with the eyes of many calm, brave souls who, seeing the angel of rest and reward rather than the grisly skeleton of Gothic fancy, can say with the strange, yet true, American poet:—

Approach, strong deliveress,
When it is so, when thou hast taken them, I joyously sing the dead,
Lost in the loving, floating ocean of thee,
Laved in the flood of thy bliss, O death.

The words at the head of this paper, "Concerning some Dead," cannot but have an instant and certain application when, just now, they meet the eyes of musical readers. A month ago there came upon us two great shocks. One day it was said that our most learned and dignified musician—he who for half-a-century and more filled so well a large space in the world of English art—had departed suddenly, called away almost in the very act of labour. Two days later we heard that a renowned singer, whom once the world worshipped for her talent, and now remembers for her virtues, had faded out of life gently, as became her. She might have prayed:—

At the last, tenderly,
From the walls of the powerful fortress'd house,
From the clasp of the knitted locks, from the keep of the well-closed doors
Let me be wafted.
Let me glide noiselessly forth;
With the key of softness unlock the locks—with a whisper,
Set ope the doors, O soul.
Tenderly—be not impatient,
(Strong is your hold, O mortal flesh, Strong is your hold, O love).

Survivors did their duty by the graves of George Alexander Macfarren and Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt. The record of their lives passed in review, and on reaching the end of those blameless pages, the judgment was "Well done, good and faithful servants." The moment has now come (it could arrive no earlier) for THE MUSICAL TIMES to lay its wreath of regret and regard upon the tombs of the departed. It is a task that brings compensation for its own sadness.

Biographical details concerning Sir George Macfarren have been, of late, so copiously supplied and are at all times so readily available that we shall withhold them here in favour of remarks upon the talent and character of the departed master. It may, no doubt, be asked: "What need of testimony in words since that long funeral procession wended its way from Hamilton Terrace to Hampstead Cemetery following the flower-bedecked coffin wherein lay the remains of 'Sir George Alexander Macfarren, Kt., Master of Arts, Professor of Music at the University of Cambridge, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, Mus. Doc., Oxon., Cantab., and Dub.'?" In the republic of art, where there is no hereditary aristocracy, neither bestowal of dignity upon people who have not earned it, this high-sounding roll of honours is itself a testimony of distinguished worth. It implies that the recipient, coming out of the mass of his fellows, gathered to himself, first, attention, then respect, then admiration, last of all, homage—doing it against the rivalry of compeers, and never gaining a step without a struggle. But, admitting all this, we have a right to look more closely into the character of our successful man, for there may be found much capable of application to others.

If one thing appeared more conspicuously than another in Macfarren, it was the indomitable perseverance with which he pressed onward to the goal of success. There are some men of such commanding genius that, like Cæsar, they have only to come and see in order to conquer. Our deceased musician was not of this order, neither had he the pliability which sometimes enables a man to outflank or burrow under what he cannot surmount. To use a military term, Macfarren always delivered a front attack upon the obstacles in his path and kept "pegging away" till they were overcome. Under the most favourable circumstances this is a sign of greatness, but how much more when the combatant has to fight in the dark? Should we now be entitled to express astonishment and contempt had Macfarren, the precious sense of sight lost, given up the struggle, and made room in the foremost rank for another soldier? Assuredly not.

Shut from the living while amongst the living;
Dark as the grave amid the bustling world;
At once from business and from pleasure barr'd;
No more to view the beauty of the spring,
Nor see the face of kindred, or of friend.

To most men this would mean death, but the greater few rise superior to fate. Thus did the late Professor Fawcett, thus, too, did Professor Macfarren, whose loss of sight appeared to be an incentive to more strenuous effort and more determined resolve. The qualities necessary for such a result lie, we need not say, apart from those that make a musician; but their exercise by a musician is, perhaps, more difficult than most others find it. A musical artist is naturally sensitive. That which others scarcely feel, touches him deeply, and while, on the one hand, he is liable to undue exaltation, he is prone, on the other, to excessive depression. Macfarren's case appears to have been exceptional in that, despite his artistic organisation, he went quietly and resolutely on; calm when the way was smooth and open, still calm, because determined, when it was rough; never turned aside by temporary defeat; never distrustful of his powers in moments of danger and crisis. In his fixed resolve and self-possession lay much of the secret of fortune, for men's lives, with all deference to an over-ruling destiny, are pretty much what they themselves make them. The career of the deceased master is, in fact, a striking exemplification of the fact that perseverance is very often a good substitute for what we call genius. Macfarren was not a genius. To him had been denied that wonderful gift which raises a man almost to the position of a god, and makes him independent of the ordinary processes through which eminence is attained. He had not the magnetic power of fascination, nor that of exciting all sympathies by an unpremeditated, almost unconscious utterance. No; everything he gained became his through the steady unfaltering application of talents not much greater than those possessed by many men who never rise from the mass into an individual place. The lesson of his life is therefore worthy of study by most of us, especially by those who, conscious that every step will have to be fought for, are disposed to fold their hands and submit to be the mere shuttlecocks of fortune.

Another remarkable feature in Macfarren's career was the comprehensiveness of his labours. He never saw why anything within the domain of his art should come amiss to him. He composed music, and, at one time, performed it; he gave lessons and lectures, he wrote criticisms and analyses, each of these departments being complete in the sense that he covered the whole space within them. Take composition, for example. Macfarren wrote operas and oratorios, music for the church and for the chamber, orchestral music, songs, vocal pieces—anything and everything which occasion invited. And in all these sub-divisions, as in other forms of labour, he justified the self-reliance implied by entering upon them. Here again, quite apart from inborn talent, we must recognise great qualities, and especially a ceaseless mental activity, made doubly difficult by the affliction which limited his natural contact with the sources of knowledge. Macfarren had an immense receptivity and a wonderful appetite for knowledge; while nothing he once made his own was ever lost, but stowed away in a capacious memory ready for use at a moment's notice. The energy and orderly habits of his mind thus made possible an equipment for all sorts of musical effort. A man so constituted would hardly be tempted to waste his hours in society, and Macfarren, even had he retained his sight, would never have sought to shine in clubs and drawing-rooms. The study was his world; he felt that there lay his work, because there only could he build up the fair edifice of fame which is now his monument.

Macfarren's achievements as a composer are, of course, those by which posterity will judge him, and it is, perhaps, too early to anticipate the final verdict. Some may say that the silent action of public opinion has settled all questions about Macfarren's music by, to a large extent, rejecting it. They may point us to operas, oratorios, cantatas, symphonies, all unperformed and as good, or as bad, as forgotten. But an artistic judgment does not invariably echo the voice of public opinion, which is sometimes wrong—though it comes right in the end; often superficial, and frequently grounded upon imperfect knowledge. We do not venture to say that Macfarren's music will ever enjoy greater vogue than at present. To prophecy is dangerous. But the assertion may safely be made that the works of our dead master will continue to exist as works of reference and study wherever his art is followed with comprehensive intelligence. Many of them may not contain the heaven-sent quality which, in the case of fabled Orpheus, "made trees, and the mountain tops that freeze, bow themselves when he did sing"; but they are valuable repositories of the highest musical culture, examples of the working of a most independent and sometimes daring mind, and a perfect storehouse of hints for young composers who are not above benefiting by the labours of others. Let it not be supposed, however, that Macfarren's music is all head and no heart. Even those but slightly acquainted with it are perfectly aware that the learned musician had his inspired moments, when he "spake with authority, and not as the scribes," and when, feeling deeply himself, he became the cause of deep feeling in others. He could be as simple, and, at the same time, as pathetic as any master. Witness the beautiful and touching anthem, "The Lord is my Shepherd," performed at the commemoration service in Westminster Abbey on the day of his funeral, and given in happy conjunction with his most original and impressive setting of the Nunc dimittis (Service in E flat), which alone is worthy to be taken as sufficient evidence of a master. These things, and others like them, will, we trust, keep the name of Macfarren sweet before the public. As for his repute with connoisseurs, that, as we have pointed out, can never be in danger. The memory of the dead is safe there.

In France it is customary for some one to stand at the grave side, when a man of mark is buried, and eulogise his character and work. In England we reserve this for commemorative services or funeral sermons, and Sir George Macfarren did not lack such kindly and impressive recognition. His body could not rest in Westminster Abbey, but that illustrious temple was, on the very day of interment, given up to a solemn function in his honour, the Dean himself pronouncing an oration which, by his kindness, we are now able to lay before our readers:—

"We who worship daily in this ancient church, have endeavoured so to order the service that is now drawing to a close as to show our sympathy for you who meet here in sorrow, and our honour for him whose loss you deplore. There are some among us fresh from the grave side of one who, from early youth to the old age of a long and honoured life, devoted all his powers to the study and to the furtherance of that great art on whose mysterious power over the human soul I need not dwell. He had achieved, as you well know, much; he had followed steadfastly a high ideal, and he had—we remember it with gratitude at an hour like this—he had set us all an example not only of kindliness and gentleness, of the open hand and the open heart, but of endurance, perseverance, industry, and courage alike in the use which he made of the great talents which God had lent him, and in the manner in which he met one of the very sorest of all deprivations and trials. You have laid his mortal remains in his grave to-day, hard by those of a kindred spirit—another blind musician—and you have passed from that open grave to a church dear to all whose hearts are capable of any sense of reverence for what is worthy of our reverence. And here within walls that have rung for centuries with the sounds of sacred song and sacred music you have listened to strains which remind you of him who long ago conceived and framed them. You have heard the words, some sad, some more cheering, of Psalms and of ancient sage; words which speak alike of the frailty of life and of God's care for the departed spirit; and you have been cheered by the immortal words in which an Apostle speaks of the blessed hope of renewed life through a risen Christ. The thoughts of many will have been with him in whom they feel that they have lost a friend and a leader. And our thoughts, those of all here, will be in sympathy with theirs. We too think of him as a leader in that Art to which all who worship here owe so deep a debt. We recognise in him the dear friend and successor of one who sleeps beneath these 'famous floors'; as the brother in a true sense of the many Masters of Music of whom our walls and windows and pavements speak so loudly. And the hearts of many here will be stirred and solemnised with the touch of a deeper feeling, as we think not of him only, but of still another—of her whose gifted spirit has been called to the God from whence it came, in the marvellous week that is now passing. We think of her too, the songstress, whose name was on every lip, the honoured friend in the zenith of her fame and onwards of him whose form and face were for years so familiar here, the Arthur Stanley who passed away before her—her whose matchless gifts were equalled by the fidelity with which she cultivated and the noble uses to which she dedicated them.

"May those who have received any portion of the very different but precious gifts with which God had endowed her or him—these labourers, whose task on this side of the grave is over—accept and use them with the same sense of duty and responsibility, the same energy, and the same modesty. And may we, we the rest, as we pass through these doors, remember the solemn call that comes to us from Christian deathbeds, from the graves long closed or open of those whom we have loved or honoured, from storied monument, from funeral hymns, from solemn anthems—the lesson conveyed to us to-day in an Apostle's words:—

"'Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.' May we return to life's tasks, from all such gatherings, with deeper faith and higher aims and firmer steps in every path of duty or beneficence, in every path, however steep, that leads to goodness, power, or truth."

We can add nothing to these eloquent words. With them we may leave our departed musician to his rest.

In the case of Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt we did not see an active worker taken suddenly from our midst and leaving a great and painful vacancy hard to fill up. For more than a year before her death, which took place on November 2, at the age of sixty-seven, she had altogether retired from the teaching of her art—doing so, however, only under stress of illness—and for many years, save on a few special occasions, she had not sung in public. The spectacle we have recently had to contemplate, therefore, was that of a great artist, long retired to the position of a simple member of society, passing peacefully away, surrounded by a loving family, and attended by the respect of the world. But though, in one sense, Jenny Lind belonged to the past even while living, her public career does not lie so far back, nor is it so recordless, as that it avails us nothing as a study of character, or as an example of high qualities. Considering with what detail the life of the "Swedish Nightingale" has been given of late in daily and other journals, particulars in this place would be a waste of space, and, we may add, of an opportunity to dwell a while upon higher matter than mere occurrences.

What are the lessons of Jenny Lind's life? In the first place, like the life of Sir George Macfarren, it teaches the supreme virtue of perseverance, and of counting nothing undone while anything remains to do. In a paper, written some years ago by Sir Julius Benedict for Scribner's Magazine, we read that while yet a child she lost her voice for a time, and then, instead of giving way to despair or abandoning her vocation, she calmly set to work upon theoretical musical studies, determined, if one road were blocked, to try another leading in the same direction. This act of the girl appears to have been perfectly characteristic of the woman in later life. She was always pressing on to the goal of success, exercising self-denial, and shrinking from no sacrifice in view of the prize she had set herself to win. Few, perhaps, can imagine how hard she worked to acquire her perfect mastery over all the difficulties, and command of all the powers of vocalisation. Many who heard Jenny Lind in her prime may have thought that she was all gift and no acquirement, deceived by the perfect ease with which her wonders were accomplished. But Sir Julius Benedict assures us that her voice was "naturally harsh," and that she became a consummate singer as the result of extraordinary labour. Do we not know that after her début in Stockholm, when offers of engagements were pouring in upon her, she refused them all in order to place herself as a pupil under Garcia, in Paris? Her clear perception and perfectly-balanced judgment detected faults in herself to which, as a rule, singers willingly close their eyes, and, with her, the sight of defect brought but one obligation—that of removal. Let us try to estimate this feature in Jenny Lind's character, for it is a great one, and the secret of her astounding success. How many young girls, seeing instant wealth and fame at their feet, would put both aside, and continue the hard and, while it lasts, unrecognised life of a student? It may be said that Jenny Lind did this upon cold calculation, illustrating the French proverb by going back only to take a run and jump forward a greater distance. Precisely; but her calculation, cold or not, was wisdom, and that sort of wisdom, involving present self-denial, with which the world is not too well acquainted. It is no secret that she loved her art for its own sake; deeming it worthy of her full devotion and her highest powers. It was not in her nature to serve music with less than her whole soul and mind and strength. An eloquent preacher has said:—"Very sacred is the vocation of an artist. All honour to the man who treats it sacredly; studies, as in God's presence, the thoughts of God which are expressed to him, and makes all things according to the pattern which He is ever ready to show to earnest and reverent genius on the mount." All honour, therefore, to Jenny Lind; for thus she acted from the time of her early days to the after-years in which she sang among the chorus of the Bach Society. Would that there were more like her and fewer of the artists so-called, who study themselves first, and, if they think of their Mistress at all, regard her as but a means to the end of their own petty advantage.

Jenny Lind's career teaches another lesson—the virtue of conscientiousness. This would naturally arise out of the reverence in which she held her art, but it was exercised by the deceased lady in an uncommon degree. Moscheles tells us to what extent she sacrificed all the pleasures of society whenever they clashed with duty. No one could tempt her to do anything likely to interfere with the proper discharge of the engagements into which she had entered. In this connection, moreover, we may look at her retirement from the lyric stage—a monumental act of self-abnegation however explained. If religious feeling prompted it, even those who are unable to sympathise must entertain the most profound respect for a great act of sacrifice. When Jenny Lind abandoned the stage she was at the full height of popularity. But for conscience' sake she stepped down from the flower-strewn boards, withdrew from the enthusiasm of her worshippers, and turned her back upon the Via Triumphalis. According to Sir Julius Benedict, her withdrawal was largely due to more mundane considerations. She doubted whether, with a few operatic characters, the expectations of the public could be met for any great length of time, and, therefore, avoided the danger of an enforced descent from her brilliant position. But even here we have a form of conscientiousness, looking onward to the future, and taking precautions against causing disappointment.

Concerning the charity of the deceased lady, there is no need to say much here. It was recognised long ago as a most conspicuous example of the sweetest of all virtues, and it has a noble monument in the Hospital for Sick Children at Norwich, to say nothing of others in America and Sweden. This, however, was only one feature among many that made up the estimable character of Jenny Lind, and, at her death, caused the world to mourn the woman no less than the artist. "Call no man happy till he dies." Madame Goldschmidt was, for the reasons just stated, happiest in her death. By way of visible honours during life, she was appointed Court Singer to the Emperor of Austria, King of Prussia, and King of Sweden; Honorary Member of the Swedish Academy of Arts and the Royal Academy of Music, London; Member of the Swedish Royal Academy of Music, and of the Board of Professors, Royal College of Music, London. Moreover, the King of Sweden conferred on her a gold medal attached to the ribbon of the Order of the Seraph. No one despises these distinctions, but all must esteem more the universal testimony to a well-spent life given over the fresh grave of Jenny Lind. May she rest in peace.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

The Carols of Christmas represent a form of literature derived from many sources, which has been transmitted through successive ages to the present. The marks of the usage to which they have been subjected, the influences which have been brought to bear upon their character in the course of generations, may be traced in the specimens known to belong to particular periods, and an idea of their origin may be gathered by inherent proofs furnished in the carols themselves.

Carol-singing is so common in the present day, and the number of carols is so large, that few people who sing them take any trouble to enquire as to their origin or peculiarities. Much has been written concerning them, so that there is little difficulty in the way of those who wish to become acquainted with their history and peculiarities. The peculiarities speak for themselves to those who care to give the matter any attention. The history, as usually related, is confined for the most part to certain of the carols. This is not without a special interest, but the researches of the many painstaking writers have as yet been confined to certain specimens contained in collections intended to promote the cultivation of certain methods of thought.

There are carols for all the chief festive seasons of the year—for the Epiphany, for Easter, for Whitsuntide, and for Christmas—but the tide of popularity has set in favour of those belonging to the last-named season. This fact is curious as showing the tenacity of popular habits, even though they be followed unthinkingly. There is every reason to believe that the custom of singing carols is derived from a pagan origin. Many of the songs betray the influence of paganism running like a weft through the woof of Christian teaching. The mixture of images and illustrations further points to the unconscious adoption of heathen references to emphasise Christian teaching, thereby implying a concession to popular thoughts. Some of these references are Celtic, some are Scandinavian, some are Roman, some are Christian, and many deal with apocryphal Christian legends. There is plenty of evidence to show that the manner of celebrating the season of Christmas in the present day is only a continuation of practices observed long before the Christian era. The custom of decorating the churches with evergreens, of houses with rosemary, bays, and mistletoe, and so forth, is Druidical or Celtic in its origin. The carrying of the "Vessel Cup" from house to house in the days before Christmas is Scandinavian, the custom of drinking "Wassail," brought into prominence by the Saxons and Danes, also comes from the old Teutonic observances. To the same source also may be referred the Hagmena song, still to be heard in remote parts of Yorkshire and Scotland, the burning of the Yule log, the continuance of the very name of Yule for Christmas. The Kentish custom of "going a Hodening" has been associated with Woden. In the observance of this, a party of young people carried the head of a dead horse on a pole. The horse is the emblem of the county of Kent, and was one of the Saxon objects of reverence. The villagers now have substituted carol-singing for this practice, and still call their carolling "going a Hodening." The "Lord of Misrule" is probably a relic of the Roman Saturnalia, when, among other matters, the servants occupied the place of the masters for a time. The election and reign of the Boy Bishop is another form of the like custom. The children of the choir were invested with ruling powers from the day of St. Nicholas to that of the Holy Innocents (December 6th to the 28th), and elected a Bishop. During the above-mentioned period all, great and small, obeyed his commands. There is in Salisbury Cathedral the monument of a Boy Bishop who died during his Episcopate. In Magdalen College, Oxford, at the carol-singing on Christmas Eve, it was, and may still be, the custom for the choristers to sit at the high table at supper while the Fellows of the College waited upon them. The hunting of the wren in Ireland on St. Stephen's Day, the hunting of owls and squirrels in Suffolk, the sword dance, the plough dance, the morris dances on Plough Monday—the Monday after Twelfth Day—and other customs associated with carol-singing are of heathen origin, and have become tempered by Christian teaching.

The word "carol" conveys a specific idea to the minds of most men, there is however only a general notion as to its exact meaning, and but a conjectural knowledge as to the origin of the term. Many words have been suggested as the supposed roots, all more or less ingenious if not accurate. The Rev. Henry Ramsden Bramley, of Magdalen College, the latest scholar who has turned his attention to the subject, in a preface to a collection of carols edited by himself and Dr. Stainer, says "that the Rev. Arthur Bedford, who published a version of the carol entitled 'A Virgin unspotted,' in the last century, gives his readers to understand that the name 'carol' is derived from Carolus, the Latin for Charles. 'A Christmas Carol,' he says, 'because such were in use in the reign of King Charles I.' But although it is easy to show from writers who died before Charles I. was born, by whom the word 'carol' is used in a sense similar to that which it bears at present, that this is not the true derivation, it is by no means easy to give an account of the real origin of the term." With regard to this derivation, it may be said further that Bedford did not invent the idea, because other writers have stated their belief that the word "carol" was first applied to a song by one Charles Duc d'Orleans, who was made prisoner on the field of Agincourt (1415). This derivation, however, is not quite correct, as the word was in use long before.

"It exists, not only in English, as early at least as the fourteenth century, but also in French, in Italian, in German, in Welsh, and in the Celtic dialects of Brittany and the Scottish Highlands."

The word "Choral" for a hymn-tune is doubtless traceable to the same source. The Rev. William Barnes, author of "Notes on Ancient Britain and the British," and of many other works, including some most beautiful poems in the Dorset dialect, states his opinion, in the work whose title is above referred to, that the root is neither Latin nor Teutonic, but Celtic, "and may have gotten into French and Italian, like some other words, from the speech of the Gauls."

There is the word "Carawl" in Welsh, which signifies a song, and "Carawl-Kaf" a May song. Among the relics of the Celtic-Cornish language there are some Christmas Carols which were written while the language was commonly spoken, and this must have been before the reign of Queen Elizabeth. At that period the significance of the word was pretty firmly established in the sense in which we now employ it—namely, as a song of joy and exultation. Thus in Spenser's "Epithalamium," we read:—

> And let the graces dance unto the rest,
> For they can do it best.
> The whiles the maidens do their carol sing,
> To which the woods shall answer and their echoes ring.

Lord Bacon in his essay "Of Adversity" says: "Even in the old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many hearse-like airs as carols." Shakespeare and Milton regard the carol as a song of devotion, for the former says:—

> No night is now with hymn or carol blest, and the latter:—

> They gladly thither haste, and by a choir
> Of squadroned angels hear this carol sung.

There are other derivations suggested which may be mentioned as having been put forward and adopted by various writers—namely, Carolla, from dancing in a round; Choras Corea and choreola, from having been danced to, sung in conjunction, or accompanied upon the bagpipes, one of the old names for that primitive instrument being Corus. Then there is the Saxon word Kyrriole, a modification of the Greek words Kyrie eleison, each and all or either of which may be accepted or rejected according to fancy.

The most convenient definition of the word is that which best fits the character it has attained —namely, a sacred ballad. When carol-singing formed part of the old customs observed at Christmas, it was usually performed by the Mummers, who visited the houses of the people of the better sort, and gave a rude representation of "St. George and the Dragon," "Robin Hood and his merry men," or some other semi-dramatic performance, which was a traditional relic of some older form of exhibition derived from the sword-dance, the mystery-play, the morality, or the masque. The sword-dance is of Scandinavian origin, the mystery-play and the morality date from mediæval times, and the masque may be referred to the renaissance period of our history.

It is generally admitted, as before-stated, that many of these old Christmas customs were a combination of the practices observed at the time of the Roman Saturnalia, the winter festival of the Druids at Christmas, and the northern feast of Yule. The burning of the Yule log marks the winter Solstice, as the Beltane fires at midsummer do the period of the days of the summer Solstice, and point to the ancient worship of the sun. We cling to old customs with remarkable tenacity, without knowing the why or wherefore, and display the influences which have been at work upon us as a nation from the earliest times, by the retention of ceremonies which exhibit those influences quite as plainly in our habits, as the use and existence of certain words in our speech show the source from whence they are derived to the student of philology.

It has been asserted by Mr. Baring Gould in his preface to Mr. Chope's collection of "Christmas Carols for use in Church," that carols owe their origin to those representations of the Holy Manger which were first introduced by St. Francis of Assisi in 1223, and which are still used in Roman Catholic and some Lutheran Churches. If this were the case, the oldest carols we possess would be of a religious character, which is not so. There is in the British Museum (MS. Reg. 16) a carol in the Anglo-Norman dialect, believed to have been written in the thirteenth century, which makes no allusion to the Nativity, but enlarges upon the customary hospitality of the period, ending with the words Wassail and Drinkhail, the usual Saxon toasts. That carols were sung by Christian communities in early times the Hymn by Prudentius written in the fourth century has been quoted to prove. Thus it commences:—

> Quid est quod arctum circulum
> Sol jam recurrens deserit
> Christusne terris nascitur
> Qui lucis auget tramitem?

Bishop Jeremy Taylor, when he calls the song of the heavenly host in the fields of Bethlehem the earliest Christmas Carol, thus teaching the Church a hymn to put into her offices for ever in the anniversary of this festivity, would seem to claim a high original for the custom. It is, however, much more likely to be derived from the custom of uniting piety and mirth at the time of Christmas, a custom as laudable as it is universal among Christian people.

One of the duties of the gentlemen and children of the Chapel Royal in time past was to sing carols at Court, and also to act in the masques or plays which were usually given at the Christmas season. In the regulations for the household of Henry VII. there are particular directions given concerning this matter. In the third year of his reign—namely, in 1487, when the king kept Court at Greenwich at Christmas and on Twelfth Night—Leland tells us that "they of the Kingis Chappell, after the first course, sang a carall." The like custom was observed in the time of his son King Henry, himself no mean musician, and therefore likely to encourage the practice. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth the fashion existed in unabated use.

An elaborate description of Christmas customs was printed in 1607, when Prince Henry, the son of James I., was entertained with great pomp and circumstance at St. John's College in Oxford.

In "good King Charles's golden days" an order existed directing the nobility and gentry who had mansion-houses in the country to repair to them for Christmas, to keep hospitality meet to their degrees. As Puritanism became more powerful, the observance of Christmas was suppressed by authority in England, as it had been in Scotland in 1555, nearly a hundred years before. In 1647 it was ordained in Parliament that the feast of the Nativity of Christ, with other holidays, should no longer be observed, and by another order, dated December 24, 1642, the singing of carols was voted superstitious, and the Parliament directed "that no observation shall be had of the five-and-twentieth day of December, commonly called Xmas day, nor any solemnity used or exercised in churches upon that day in respect thereof."

Although forbidden by Act of Parliament, the Christmas customs and festivities were still observed and continued in remote country places. Even in Scotland, where the custom of carol-singing seems never to have taken kindly root, the prohibition was not entirely successful. In 1582 there was issued an Act of the Scottish Parliament against "singing of caralles" within and without kirks, at certain seasons of the year, and observing "sik uthers superstitious and papisticall rites." From that time, however, the welcome Christmas received in England has been reduced in stateliness, importance, and universality, until about half-a-century ago, when the observance of carol-singing, among other customs, had almost died away. William Hone, in his "Ancient mysteries described," published in 1823, laments the decay of carol-singing in his time, and also that no one had taken the trouble to collect these relics of the past. In the list of Chap-books printed and published in Aldermary and Bow Churchyard in the eighteenth century, not a single collection of carols is to be found in the list. Allusions to carol-singing are to be found in such books as "Round about our coal fire," but particulars are wanting. Collections of carols are not numerous. Mr. Sandys was not the first to give to the world a selection of these simple lyrics, for Mr. Davies Gilbert published a collection of Ancient Christmas Carols, with the tunes to which they were commonly sung, and although each collection is of an unscientific character, they form together the basis of our modern knowledge of the subject. Before this time there was a collection printed in the year 1531 by Wynken de Worde, of which only one leaf has been preserved. This was rescued by Hearne, the antiquary, and purchased at his death by Dr. Rawlinson, who bequeathed it to the Bodleian library. There are two carols upon the precious leaf, one a "Carol of Huntynge," from the "Boke of St. Albans"; the other, "A Carol, bringing in the Bore's Head," which is annually sung at Queen's College, Oxford, on Christmas Day.

Dr. Bliss, of Oxford, also printed a sheet of Ancient Carols for private distribution at the beginning of this present century; Ritson gave a few in his "Antient Songs and Ballads," 1782; there are others in Warton's "History of English poetry," in Douce's "Illustrations to Shakespeare," in Dunbar's "Antient Scottish poems," and other works of the past. The revival of the custom of carol-singing in churches and elsewhere during recent years has given rise to a great many works on the subject containing carols of antiquity and of modern days, with or without the proper musical notes. The chief of these are Sedding's "Antient Goodly Carols and Carols for Christmas-tide," Helmore's "Carols for Christmas," Husk's "Songs of the Nativity," Silvester's "Christmas Carols," and Stainer and Bramley's excellent collections.

An exhaustive account might be written upon the history of the various popular carols, pointing out the meaning of certain of the allusions therein contained, their philology, bearing, and purpose. The carol "God rest you merry, gentlemen," is one of the best known by all classes. It is so familiar as to be called by many the Christmas Carol, as if there were no others. Like most things commonly known and liked, all record of its history or the date of its production is a mystery. Judging by the character of the words, it would seem to belong to the latter part of the last century. The melody of this carol is one of the old tunes which, in the last century, were sung to the "affectionate copy of verses" which a condemned criminal was supposed to have written as an appendix to "his last dying speech." Before the days of cheap newspapers these things were much sought after by the common people as the source of presumably exact information on a subject of considerable interest. Many of the most popular of the carols still extant are sung to airs which have been pressed into a like dismal duty from a remote period. Some of them possess a singular beauty, which becomes the more apparent when dissociated from the "hangman's verse" with which they were formerly connected.

Among the carols distinctly traceable to a distant period of history is the one called the Coventry Carol, because it was sung in one of the mysteries famous from having been performed in that town by the company of Sheremen and Taylors on the festival of Corpus Christi, the Thursday next after Trinity Sunday. These mysteries were usually acted in churches or chapels upon temporary scaffolds.

The burden "lullay," which appears in the Coventry Carol, is employed in other carols of old date; there are two of the time of Henry VII. printed in Mr. Husk's "Songs of the Nativity," one which commences—

This endris night I saw a sight,
A star as bright as day,
And ever among a maiden song,
Lullay, by-by, lullay.

This has found its way into more recent collections of carols. The second, which is taken from Byrd's "Psalms, sonets, and songs of sadness and pietie," was first printed in 1587 with the music.

The antiquity of the carol "Nowell, nowell," is beyond all question. It is contained in a MS. written in the reign of Henry VI., formerly in the possession of Mr. Thomas Wright. It is there set to sacred words, beginning—

Nowell, nowell, nowell, nowell,
This is the salutacion of the Aungell Gabryell.

There is a note appended in the MS. to this effect:—"This is the tewyn for the song foloyng, yf so be that ye wyll have another tewyn, it may be at your plesure, for I have set all the song."

The "song foloyng" is a drinking song, the words of which are so quaint, that their appearance here may be excused:—

Bryng us in good ale, good ale,
For our Blyssyd Lady sake,
Bryng us in good ale.
Bryng us in no browne bred, fore that is made of brane,
Nor bryng us in no whyt bred, fore therein is no gane,
But bryng us in good ale, good ale,
And bryng us in good ale.
For our Blyssyd Lady sake,
Bring us in good ale.

2. Bryng us in no befe, for ther is many bonys,
But bryng us in good ale, for that goth downe at onys.

3. Bryng us in no bacon, for that is passing fate,
But bryng us in good ale, and gyfe us i nought of that.

4. Bryng us in no mutton, for that is often lene,
Nor bryng us in no trypes, for they be syldom clene.

5. Bryng us in no eggys, for ther ar many schelles.
But bryng us in good ale, and gyfe us no[th]yng ellys.

6. Bryng us in no butter, for therin are many herys,
Nor bryng us in no pygges flesch, for that wyl mak us borys.

7. Bryng us in no puddynges, for therin is al godes good,
Nor bryng us in no veneson, for that is not for our blod.

8. Bryng us in no capons flesch, for that is ofte der,
Nor bryng us in no dokes flesch, for thei slober in the mer.
But bryng us in good ale, good ale, and bryng us in good ale;
For our Blyssyd Lady sake, bryng us in good ale.

By this it may be seen that the old festive carol was still in favour in the fifteenth century. The existence of the graver words side by side with the more humorous—the same tune being common to both—may indicate the writer's adoption of the principles which led to the Reformation later on. The solemnity of the melody intensifies the drollery of the words. The "tewyn" is in Sedding's collection, and in "Christmas Carols new and old" ("Noël, noël"), harmonised by Dr. Stainer.

The carols in "Macaronic Verse," a mixture of the vernacular with Latin, of which "Christo paremus canticam, excelsis Gloria" (When Christ was born of Mary free), "In dulci jubilo," and others are fair samples, are the production of the early part of the sixteenth century. Other generations have other treatment of carols. The contrasted lines of Latin and ordinary speech gave way to a purer diction.

Some of the carols, such as that of "The Incarnation" in Stainer and Bramley's collection, now popular, have modern words with tunes which may be old. This is certainly as old as the time of Queen Elizabeth. "Jacob's Ladder" is associated with a traditional melody of greater antiquity than the words. It is doubtful if these words are very old, they are not conceived in the spirit of the old carols, and the expressions are too smooth and polished to have emanated from any "rude bard." The tune dates from the beginning of the seventeenth century. It is a slight variation of the melody called "Balance a Straw," which was a favourite dance tune at one time. The carol is popular in Devon and Cornwall. There is no doubt that the chorus after each verse possesses characteristics, especially in the form and expressions used in the chorus, which may be referred to the hymns popular among the religious portion of the mining population of some parts of those counties. There is a large number of carols popular in the West Country, many of which are printed in Sandy's collection, and many as yet not gathered from among the folk with whom they are annual favourites. Among these popular beyond the confines of the West is the carol "A Virgin unspotted." There are several versions of it, and the variations are sufficiently marked as to have led some collectors to classify and enter them as distinct carols. Hone has done so. There are also considerable differences in the chorus which concludes each verse. This was the carol which induced the Rev. Arthur Bedford to give his very curious definition of the word. Mr. Husk says that there are certain expressions in this carol which convey the idea of its possessing some claim to be called ancient.

The melody to which this is usually sung, is another of the "last dying speech" tunes which were at one time well known as such, but now are almost forgotten. Whether they were first set as Christmas Carols or, being popular, were adapted to semi-sacred words, is too subtle a question to enter upon now. It will be enough to mention that the union of secular tunes with words of sacred import is to be traced a far way back. Shakespeare notices this in his "Winter's Tale," when he say that there is "but one Puritan among them, and he sings Psalms to hornpipes." In 1642 a volume was published under the title of "Psalmes and songs of Sion, turned into the language, and set to tunes of a strange land, by W(illiam) S(later), intended for Christmas Carols, and fitted to divers of the most noted and common but solemne tunes, everywhere in this land familiarly used and knowne." Upon the copy preserved in the British Museum, a former possessor has written the names of some of the tunes to which the author designed them to be sung; for instance, Psalm 6 to the tune of "Jane Shore," Psalm 10 to "Bara Foster's dreame," Psalm 43 to "Crimson Velvet," Psalm 47 to "Garden Green," and Psalm 84 to "The Fairest nymph of the Valleys." "Green Sleeves," a tune mentioned by many of the Elizabethan poets in a way which shows that its associations in those days were not so respectable as they are at present, has also been used as the melody for more than one Christmas Carol. Spiritual songs constructed upon this principle, namely,—that of giving a common and often abused melody to words of devotional import, are not peculiar to this country. The tunes sung to Clement Marot's translation of the Psalms into French were common folk-tunes. The version of the Psalms, adopted for circulating the reformed opinions in Scotland 300 years ago, were treated in like fashion—"Gude and godly ballates changed out of prophane songs," as they were called. In Holland and Flanders, at the same period, a like version was used, as is shown in the Collection called "Souter Liedekens," 1511; and in Italy such things were not rare. It is well known that Palestrina used the melodies of the most questionable ditties as the themes for the counterpoint of his motetts and other sacred music.

Carols called spiritual or devotional are very numerous, and contain special points of interest in subject and versification. There is also another class, the narrative carols, which may lay claim to as great if not to a greater popularity, especially with the humbler classes, the sequence of a story, rather than the subtleties of theology, having most charms for those who professedly possess "no head for such high thoughts." "The First Nowell," which heads this list, is almost as popular as "God rest you merry, gentlemen," but, unlike that carol, it has never been considered worthy of the dignity of preservation or promulgation by means of the broadside. It was first printed in Davies Gilbert's collection, and next in Sandys' collection, in both cases being given as a West Country Carol. There are two versions of the tune to which this carol is sung, one of especial beauty of melody, the other a sort of perversion of an ecclesiastical tone, interesting, perhaps, but not pretty. The word Nowell (Noël), which occurs so frequently in these old carols, is the French for Christmas, and also for a Christmas Carol. As it has been occasionally used as a cry of joy, without any reference to Christmas, some writers have attempted to trace it to a source unconnected with Christmas. Mr. Bramley says:—"Novellæ, meaning news, and Yule or some similar word have been suggested. The latest French philologists have decided that it comes from Natalis; that is to say, 'Dies natalis,' the birthday of Christ. The word was brought into use in England at the time of the Norman Conquest, and was employed as we do the word Christmas."

Of the carols of modern days and the result of the revival of the practice and study of carol-singing much might be advanced. First of all, the name of the Rev. Thomas Helmore should be mentioned with honour as having been the pioneer of the modern revival of carol-singing. He not only brought forward many of the old carols, but also many new ones written in the old spirit, and by his labours gave a fresh impetus to carol writing and collecting. Of the value of all these things nothing further can be advanced now. It is enough to say, however, that certain of the authors have striven, and in some cases very successfully, to catch the ideal of the carol. They have not slavishly imitated the old patterns, but yet their works may stand on the same line with them, as equal in simplicity of diction and quaintness of expression. The most successful writers of this sort are the late Dr. J. M. Neale, the Rev. Archer Gurney, the Rev. H. R. Bramley, and Mr. W. Chatterton Dix.

America has also contributed something to swell the list of modern carols. One of the best known for the Feast of the Epiphany, "We three kings," was first printed anonymously in England in 1862, in a periodical called the Penny Post, and an interesting controversy has been instituted concerning its antiquity. The author was the Rev. John Henry Hopkins, D.D., an American divine. There are some very ancient carols concerning the three kings. In the MS. in the British Museum before referred to, there are not only two, but there is also the legend of the three kings, or wise men, from which we learn that "the first was called Melchior, King of Nubia and Arabia, who offered the Saviour gold, and who is described as the least of stature and state; Baltazar, King of Godoly and of Saba, who offered incense, and was also mean of stature; and Jaspar who was King of Taars (or Tharsis) and of the Isle of Egripwille, who offered myrrh, and was most in person, and was a black Ethiop." Thus was fulfilled the Psalmist's prophecy: "The Kings of Tharsis and of the Isles shall bring presents; the Kings of Arabia and Saba shall bring gifts." They were afterwards baptised by St. Thomas the Apostle, and long after their deaths, their bodies were conveyed by the Empress Helena, the mother of Constantine the Great, to Constantinople, whence they were removed to Milan, and ultimately by Renatus or Reinold, Archbishop of Cologne, to the latter city, where they remain, and whence they have acquired the title of the Three Kings of Cologne.

There are many other carols of a legendary character which possess some interest, belonging both to Christmas and to other seasons. The subjects of a great many, such as "The Cherry-tree Carol," "The Seven Joys," "The Child Christ at Play," together with their references and allusions, have been taken from the apocryphal books of the New Testament. From the same source the subjects of many of the most beautiful paintings, prints, and woodcuts of the old German and Italian masters, as well as the pictures in illuminated missals, have been taken. The legends concerning the birth of the Virgin, her marriage with Joseph on the budding of the rod, details of the time onwards from the nativity of Jesus, the stories of His infancy, His labouring at His trade as a carpenter, all find their origin in these books. Many of the religious pageants, the moralities and monkish mysteries performed as dramas at Chester, Coventry, and other parts of England, are almost word for word with the stories of the apocryphal New Testament, to which work the student may be referred as likely to reward his curiosity, if not to satisfy his desire for knowledge on the subject.

Many of the popular carols are written in a style of familiarity which would be scarcely tolerated now. This has led to necessary revisions of the text by modern editors. How far this is justifiable is not a matter for discussion here. It would certainly seem that those who argue for the accuracy rather than for the purity of the text, are right when they say, if the carols were considered worthy of being placed before modern readers and singers, that not only the spirit but the diction should be preserved. In days gone by, religious phraseology was part of every day speech. If the energy of our language in the present day is due to less blasphemous references than those which were common to our fathers, there is little reason for believing that the "ornaments" of our common speech are less revolting in degree. At all events, we keep them out of our poetry and carols intended for the use of the young. The practice of singing carols in church has in a great measure made it imperative that their diction should be decent, and although some which are sung in sacred places are derived from pagan or apocryphal sources, our modern sense of propriety demands that the carol should be as pure and as Christian as possible. The "tidings of comfort and joy," which their simple lines are meant to impart, are likely to be the more welcome if they are expressed in language which is proper, although it be quaint.

THE GREAT COMPOSERS

By Joseph Bennett.

No. XXIII.—FÉLICIEN DAVID (concluded from page 654).

"Le Désert" was quickly performed a second time with no less success than that which attended its first representation. We have the evidence of the composer himself to this effect. Writing to a friend he said: "At last I am recompensed for my toil and my struggles. I have given my second concert at the Théâtre Italien. The success was as great, even greater than on the first occasion. The house contained the élite of the Parisian public, and the evening confirmed my initial good fortune. I have received ovations without being carried away by them, and I know to what they bind me. God helping, I trust that my new works will not be unworthy of me. I often think of my native place in the midst of my triumphs, for there is no happiness for me apart from that of my good relatives and friends."

At our composer's feast of joy—none but those who [illegible] struggled long and at last conquered can tell what a feast it was—the inevitable death's head had [illegible] As we pointed out last month, David's [illegible] left him in debt—a millionaire in applause, [illegible] pauper in pocket. He owed, indeed, as much as 1,200 francs after paying out every sou of receipts. Naturally, he looked to the sale of "Le Désert" as a means of making up what was to him a formidable [illegible] But the publishers were not eager. Whether, as has been said, the novelty of the work made them shy of it, or whether they thought that its success would end with the proverbial nine days, it is bootless to enquire. We have the fact that they held aloof, till at last one of them, bolder than the rest, offered the composer precisely the amount required to discharge his obligations. David took the money thankfully, and at once; but soon found that he had parted as well with the right of performance as of publication. This state of things, it appears, was not recognised till it had been fought over in a court of law, which sustained the publisher's contention and diverted to his pocket a stream of gold that the composer had fondly hoped would flow into his own. David, however, was no longer in distress. "Nothing succeeds like success," and the favour shown to "Le Désert" secured to him good prices for compositions that had long lain in his desk because nobody would look at them.

Some idea of the impression suddenly made by "Le Désert" can be gathered from a notice of the work which appeared in the Gazette Musicale: "Make room, gentlemen, make room I say! Open your ranks, step aside! A great composer is born to us, a man of singular power, of extraordinary character and rare talent, who all at once fascinates an entire audience, who moves and masters them imperiously, who draws from them cries of enthusiasm, and gains an astonishing popularity in less than two hours. This is not blindness on our part, or prejudice, or hyperbole. It is the simple story of success the most spontaneous, the most astonishing, at which we have ever assisted. Our ears ring yet with the impetuous explosion of applause. It was a strange, irresistible, unanimous enthusiasm. It was also the frank and loyal expression of true and deep feeling." But David was soon to find that all the world did not agree with Parisian opinion. In 1845, having given concerts in the south of France, he travelled to Germany, and, with his "Désert" challenged the criticism of a public not likely to be prejudiced in favour of anything French. In Frankfort he met Mendelssohn, who received him with characteristic kindness, and astonished David by playing his quintets, at first sight, upon the pianoforte, doing so "without missing a note, a nuance, or an intention." But all Mendelssohn's countrymen were not equally polite to the visitor from over the Rhine. Some of them, who wrote in newspapers, fell foul of "Le Désert," reproaching its author for producing his effect by means of Arab melodies and melodramatic recitative rather than by musical ideas. Moreover, they contended that the simple form of the work, which had made such a lively impression upon the French, was the result of a feeble conception. Even Moscheles complained that the subject was treated "in a Frenchified way," as if, forsooth, a French composer could reasonably be expected to adopt any other. Fétis justly remarks: "David's work should, without prejudice, be judged from the point of view at which the composer placed himself—that is to say, as a musical picture. The genre should be the object of criticism, because art, in its immensity, repulses the co-operation of a programme, the inevitable effect of which is to limit its domain. But, taken as an exception and considered for itself alone, the "Désert" has incontestable qualities of local colour and originality. German pedantry never sufficiently takes the last-named merit into account."

During his tour, David gave concerts at Potsdam, where "Le Désert" was performed before the Court; at Baden, Frankfort, Mannheim, Munich, Pesth, and Vienna, no less than four taking place in the Imperial city. The composer's time, however, was not wholly given to this sort of work. Like his countryman, Berlioz, under similar circumstances, he composed here a little, there a little, as opportunity served, especially at Baden and Vienna, where the greater part of an Oratorio, "Moïse au Sinaï," was committed to paper. David seems to have kept his mind in the condition of a photographer's plate, prepared to receive and reflect its surroundings whenever exposed. In the East he was Oriental, in Germany he became somewhat German, as the style of his oratorio shows. Naturally this was as little acceptable to the Parisians as the Symphonic Ode had been to the Teutons, and when "Moïse au Sinaï" was performed at the Opéra (March 28, 1846) the audience showed their disappointment unmistakably. "It was very badly received by the public," writes M. Azevedo, "or, to speak more correctly, was not received at all. Many persons left the place before the end." The same author assumes that envy of previous brilliant success had something to do with this failure; but we need not agree with him in this in order to share his satisfaction with the reversal of opinion when "Moïse au Sinaï" was produced at the Conservatoire in December of the following year.

Warned by the reception of his "austere and grandiose" oratorio, David fell back, for his next work, upon the Ode-Symphony form, and wrote a companion to "Le Désert" upon the subject of Christopher Columbus. This work was originally in three parts, respectively entitled, "Le Départ, La Traversée, L'Arrivée." Two others were subsequently added, dealing with, first, a calm at sea under the tropic sun; and next, the revolt of the great navigator's crew. Although the ode was thus made to embrace a variety of picturesque and suggestive subjects, it has never enjoyed the popularity of "Le Désert," save perhaps, at the beginning of its career, when seven concerts were given at the Opéra Comique under the composer's direction and amid plentiful evidence of public favour. David, fated to undergo worry as an entrepreneur, had some difficulty in this case also, owing to the caprice of the director of the Théâtre Italien, who suddenly interdicted the whole of his musical staff, including the conductor, Tilmant, from assisting at the performances, under pain of losing six months' salary. It was this step that caused David to take the bâton himself, instead of, as usual, keeping in the background. By the way, "Christophe Colomb" brought our composer the coveted Cross of the Legion of Honour, presented to him by King Louis Philippe in person, after a performance of the work at the Tuileries.

David's next work had a somewhat curious origin. M. Bohain, an entrepreneur of the period, started a public garden in Paris, called it "Le Château des Fleurs," and hoped to attract the public by giving high class music. With this object in view he applied to David for a new work, the composer, in turn, consulting the librettist, Méry, as to a subject. Seeing there was a garden, Méry advised a "mystery" dealing with the events recorded as having taken place within the primitive pleasaunce of Eden. The idea was worked out in due course; and David's overture to the piece seeks to illustrate the condition of the world before the creation of man. Méry's lines, forming the poetic basis of the overture, may be rendered into English, almost literally, thus:—

"The air is thick with fog, and the ocean inundates the planet. No being sees these commotions, this desolate globe with its sombre hues, these mountains on fire, these mountains extinguished, these dead or smoking craters. How long has lasted this age of the world, in which the mourning planet, the solitary ocean, together cry out for our birth? God, with whom there is no beginning or end, alone knows the duration of this immense travail; a thousand years are for Him but a moment."

Following this comes a picture of the terrestrial paradise. Adam falls asleep, while an angelic choir softly sings: "Adam, thou shalt see thy Eve; from the flowers she will arise; she is the wife of thy dreams; she is grace and goodness." Eve is created, and the flowers sing her praises. By way of variety, the second part opens with a chorus of demons and Satan tempts Eve to gather the forbidden fruit. The demons celebrate their victory; Adam re-enters, and the work ends with a trio for Eve, Adam, and Lucifer. Méry and David's reproduction of a very old type of music-drama was to have been performed in the Parisian garden on a stage amid real trees and flowers, but M. Bohain's enterprise came to an end before the work was ready. Under these circumstances it was offered to, and accepted by, the directors of the Opéra, who, however, could not produce it owing to the superior claims of another work. The Opéra, however (then called Théâtre de la Nation), witnessed its performance without dresses, scenery, or action, on August 25, 1848. Just then the second French Republic, only a few months old, was going through a severe political crisis, and, writes M. Azevedo: "The breath of revolution agitated all spirits. One heard with one ear only the music so worthy of being heard by two. At each moment a new edition of the journals appeared in the house and the rustling of paper covered up at times the soft murmurs of the orchestra describing the impressions of Eve at first sight of the flowers and birds. It was the terrestrial paradise of newspaper vendors and the inferno of authors and artists."

Presently, another entrepreneur, M. Plant, sought to enlist the co-operation of our composer. He had an idea of establishing gigantic fêtes, in which music was, of course, to play a distinguished part. For him David wrote twelve dances, but these, like the mystery play, were never performed as intended. Unfortunate M. Plant failed to make the government see the public advantage of his project, and thus David was left with his dances on his hands. Some of them were afterwards utilised in the ballets of "Herculanum" and "Lalla Rookh."

It was now time for David to make an appearance on the lyric stage. There only could his real status as a French composer be determined, and he did not shrink from the test. The book of his first opera, "La Perle du Brésil," was written for him by MM. Gabriel and Sylvain Saint-Etienne, who founded it upon a story not unlike that of Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine.' A Portuguese Admiral, Salvador, has brought from Brazil a young savage named Zora, transformed her by education and training into a brilliant and accomplished lady, and hopes to make her his wife. He goes on a voyage, taking Zora with him, and recognises, in the dress of a common sailor, a young lieutenant, Lorenz, who is the maiden's lover. The Admiral's purpose of revenge is interrupted by a tempest which wrecks the vessel on the Brazilian coast. The natives are about to kill those who escape to land when the voice of Zora is heard invoking the Great Spirit. The Brazilians fall on their knees, they recognise their young compatriot, spare the lives of the Europeans, and assist at the nuptials of Zora and Lorenz, whose union the Admiral no longer opposes. Some delay took place in putting "La Perle du Brésil" upon the boards. At first it was accepted by M. Perrin of the Opéra Comique, but, subsequently, that manager required changes to be made in the libretto. On meeting with a refusal from the authors, Perrin flung the work up altogether and would have no more to do with it. It is curious as showing the different position occupied by a French librettist as compared with his English brother, that MM. Saint-Etienne opened negotiations with the director of the Lyrique, without consulting the composer, who was one day astonished at receiving a stamped agreement to which his signature was required. David declined the lead of his colleagues in this matter, and, through Scribe's intervention, pourparlers were again entered into with Perrin. In the end they came to nothing, "La Perle du Brésil" going, after all, to the Lyrique, where it was produced on November 22, 1851, and so well received that the first five performances brought an increasing number of the public to the house. The coup d'état of December 2 had, as may be supposed, a damaging effect upon the run of the piece, which, nevertheless, is recorded as a success in the annals of the theatre.

At this time David was not giving his entire attention to dramatic music. He composed an overture, a march, some dance airs, and other pieces. In his odd moments, too, he constructed a Finale for a mélodrame having the Last Judgment as its subject. The Great Day of Account seems to exercise an attraction upon French musicians, and David, taking the matter very much au serieux, actually contemplated the production of his piece at that home of melodrama, the Porte St. Martin. In this he was disappointed, the work being returned upon his hands. Even Paris managers had a scruple about representing the Last Judgment. David equally objected to toil for nothing, and consulted Méry about turning his music to some account. The librettist naturally suggested working it into an opera, and that course was determined upon. Méry accordingly prepared a libretto entitled "Le Dernier Amour," but the difficulty was to bring in the Last Judgment music on any reasonable pretext. The author took infinite pains with his task, which M. Azevedo describes as "frightful," adding "one could find a thousand ways to reach an ordinary dénouement, but very few to arrive at one so exceptional as the Last Judgment." At length, however, the work was completed, and accepted at the Théâtre Lyrique, but not performed, the artists then engaged at that house being found incompetent to such a task. "Le Dernier Amour," as it turned out, was reserved for a more brilliant début, being produced at the Opéra (March 4, 1859) under the name of "Herculanum." But—and this is really a comic feature in the story—the Last Judgment Finale was excised. The story of the opera may be outlined as follows:—Olympia, queen of a country bordering on the Euphrates, has come to Italy, where her brother, the pro-consul Nicanor, resides. Two Christians, Helios and Lilias, an espoused pair, are brought before them. Nicanor orders their immediate execution, but Olympia has another plan. She would seek to seduce the man, and leave her brother to tempt the woman. A feast is ordered, drugged wine is given to Helios, and, despite the warning of Magnus, who liberally quotes the Apocalypse, the orgie proceeds. Nicanor meanwhile seeks Lilias in a Christian place of assembly. He makes love to her, but the maiden, encouraged by the apparition of a resplendent cross which the pro-consul cannot see, repulses him with horror. At that moment a flash of lightning destroys the impious one. Satan then appears, seizes the mantle of Nicanor, and, himself invisible, brings before the eyes of Lilias the spectacle of her lover reclining at the feet of Olympia. In the third act the orgies of Olympia and Helios are renewed. Lilias enters, hoping to recall her lover to his better self. Helios, repentant, despairs of regaining his place in the maiden's heart, and, as she is led away, he exclaims: "I have defiled my soul! Nothing can absolve me in the eyes of Lilias. Let me save my life, even if I live infamous. Queen, I am thine! I love thee, Olympia!" Felix Clement's remarks on this are none too severe: "Can anyone imagine a more gross and brutal dramatic scene wherewith to make a fourth act necessary and prolong the evening? Thus to strike Lilias in her loving heart and Christian faith! O proprieties and methods of Corneille, Racine, and even of Quinault, what have you become!" In the final act takes place the eruption of Vesuvius, which clears the stage of all the dramatis personæ, Satan excepted, who, being in his element, takes no harm. At the last moment, Magnus exclaims "Christians, death is upon us," to which Helios (now repentant and pardoned) answers, "It is heaven! It is life!" David's music was able to make amends for the defects of this strange story, and the opera had a successful run.

Our composer followed up "Herculanum" with "Lalla Rookh"—a two-act piece, words by MM. Lucas and Michel Carré, who, as may be supposed, founded their book upon Moore's poem, the "argument" of which is so far followed that no synopsis of the dramatic plot need be given here. The success of this work is best shown by the fact that, first played on May 12, 1862, it was given for the hundredth time on April 9, 1863. M. Azevedo declares that it made the fortune of the Opéra Comique, "and gave an effectual answer to those who deny to Félicien David the power of writing true dramatic music."

"Le Saphir" followed, and was represented, also at the Opéra Comique, on March 8, 1865. The librettists, De Leuven, Michel Carré, and Hadot, based their drama upon Shakespeare's "All's well that ends well," and gave the composer abundant opportunities, of which he somehow failed to make the expected use. "Le Saphir" is described by M. Arthur Pougin as "mediocre and without colour." So, apparently, thought the public. After this failure David produced no more operas. A work entitled "Le Captive" was, it is true, rehearsed at the Lyrique, but the composer withdrew it before the night fixed for performance. Moreover, he left behind him fragments of another.

Among the later achievements of David were a Symphony in C minor, three pianoforte trios, a set of symphonic sketches, and a number of pianoforte pieces, choruses, dance melodies, &c.

Abundant honour fell to the composer's lot in his last days. The success of "Lalla Rookh" brought him promotion to the grade of officer of the Legion of Honour, and in 1867 the Académie awarded to him the biennial prize of 20,000 francs granted by the Emperor for the work which, within the ten previous years, had reflected most honour upon the country. In pronouncing their judgment the Academicians said:—"We crown by this act the whole career of M. Félicien David, and there are few cases in which artistic merit is better supported by nobility of character, by firmness in adversity, by disinterested love of the beautiful, and by respect alike for himself and the dignity of art." With such eulogium from so illustrious a body, David might well have died content, but the cup of his reward was not yet full. Two years later, the Academicians received him into their own ranks by 60 votes out of 104. He took the seat vacated by the death of Berlioz, whose successor he became as librarian at the Conservatoire.

There remained to David seven years more of life. These he spent in ease and honour, dying on August 26, 1876, amid universal regrets. The story of his life should encourage those who are inclined to despair when the battle seems at first to go against them. It is a grand incentive to perseverance—

> A Roman virtue,
> That wins each god-like act, and plucks success
> Even from the spear-proof crest of rugged danger.

To those who have the progress of music at heart, and who possess the means, as well as the desire, to aid the cause, we earnestly commend the perusal of the following paragraph from the "Foreign Notes" in our last number: "A sum of 70,000 marks has been set apart by the Princess Hohenlohe (the daughter of the friend and testamentary executrix of Franz Liszt, Princess Sayn Wittgenstein) for the foundation at Weimar of a 'Liszt-Stiftung,' intended to render pecuniary assistance to young pianists and composers in the pursuit of their studies. The Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar has accepted the Protectorate of this excellent institution, which was to have been inaugurated on the 22nd ult., the birthday of the poet-composer whose memory it is intended to honour." Only those engaged in musical tuition can be cognisant of the numerous claims which would legitimately be made upon such a fund were it instituted in England. Of course we are fully aware that not only are there free scholarships periodically competed for at several institutions, but that talented students are often enabled to receive a musical education, and even to travel abroad, through the generosity of private individuals; but we plead especially for the musically-gifted children who, unable to procure good instruction, are prevented from attempting to place themselves in competition with those who have already been safely guided some distance on the road towards proficiency. Were it possible to organise a similar fund to that which has received such high patronage at Weimar, there can be little doubt that musicians of eminence would be glad to give their services for the examination of candidates who are destitute of the means of ripening those powers with which they are endowed by nature; and we need scarcely say that there are many who would willingly contribute liberally towards an undertaking which would truly "supply a want" in this country.

THE death of Sir George Macfarren leaves vacant the chair of Principal of the Royal Academy. The authorities of that Institution recognise the difficulty of making a selection out of their own body to fill that vacancy, and have appointed an Acting Committee, consisting of M. Sainton, Mr. Walter Macfarren, and Dr. Steggall, to perform certain imperative duties, and to gain time to deliberate upon the choice of a successor. The matter concerns the Academy much, and the public more, as upon the selection made will depend its future prosperity. An Institution acting under the protection of a Royal Charter is much looked up to by the outside public, ignorant of the inner working, and judging only by results. Although it is practically of no great moment to the public who may be selected as the head, it will be of great advantage that someone should be promoted to the position of dignity who has earned for himself a name by his labours in and out of the Academy. There are only a few at present attached to the Institution who are known beyond its walls, however worthy their efforts may be within them. All of the professors doubtless desire to see the work carried on prosperously, and to do as much as possible to advance the cause of art as well as to multiply pupils. It will be for them soon to consider very seriously whether these objects will not be attained by the choice of some old pupil, famous in the outer world, or by a combination of forces. Why should there be a Royal Academy and a Royal College working in rivalry? Could not an amalgamation be effected? The cause of music would be greatly benefitted by the union of the two powers. Competition may be wholesome for trade, but it is not very healthy for art.

THE recent superb performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique at the Crystal Palace may serve as an excuse for extracting an amusing anecdote from Berlioz's Correspondance inédite. Writing to a friend in Paris, from Prague, in April, 1846, he says: "Ils chantent maintenant ici les thèmes de la Fantastique (l'Idée fixe et le Bal) jusque dans les rues. Ils ont fait des phrases de cette symphonie une sorte d'argot musical. Quand on rencontre une femme:—

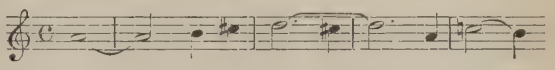
veut dire qu'elle est charmante—



veut dire qu'on est triste et inquiet." It would be hard to give a better illustration of the musical atmosphere of Bohemia than is to be found in the foregoing anecdote. It is not to be wondered at, under the circumstances, that Berlioz declared it to be the most musical country in the world.

UNDER the title of "An Olive Branch from America," the Editor of the Nineteenth Century has reprinted a letter from Mr. R. Pearsall Smith on "An Anglo-American Copyright," with the comments made upon that letter by Mr. Gladstone, Lord Tennyson, the Duke of Argyll, Archdeacon Farrar, Mr. Rider Haggard, Mr. Lewis Morris, Mr. Justin McCarthy, Sir Thomas Farrer, Mr. Walter Besant, Mr. Matthew Arnold, Professor Huxley, and Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench and Co., poetry, politics, history, fiction, theology, science, criticism, and commerce being thus represented. The majority are in favour of the project of an open literary royalty. The publishers candidly say "that while it would be extremely beneficial to the English authors, it would have little or no effect on the publishers. It would certainly not hurt them." This brief comment covers the whole matter. It is a question for authors, not for publishers, and as Professor Huxley says in the best and most conclusive letter of the series, "I am of opinion that this proposal for 'protected copyright with free-trade competition' is false in principle, and, so far as English authors and transatlantic publishers are concerned, would be futile in practice. If adopted, it would merely come to the issue of letters of marque to people who are now frankly pirates." This, then, implies a connivance at warlike practices: The "Olive branch from America" is therefore premature.

BY means of advertisements in the newspapers, as well as through the medium of handbills, the public is often asked a series of questions more or less relevant or pertinent, more or less personal or inquisitorial. Do you bruise your oats yet? Do you double up your perambulators? Why pay rent? Why run up tailors' bills? or the like athletic exercises. All these questions are no doubt capable of solution, but the constancy with which they are repeated rather implies that the correct answers have not yet been given. The latest query of the kind which has perplexed many musical minds is this: "Why not learn to play the piano by Christmas? Why not learn to play the piano, when you can be taught to play twenty-five tunes in twelve lessons without having any previous knowledge of music whatever? Method equally efficacious with a child of five or an adult of fifty. Practising made a pleasure!" To acquire two tunes and a bittock at each lesson. What a temptation to those who begin "without having any previous knowlege of music whatever." As the hand-bill further states, in poetry, if you please:

O what a pleasure 'tis the piano to play,
It whiles many weary hours away.

"Why not learn to play the piano by Christmas?" Why not, indeed.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

This Society commenced its season under extremely favourable circumstances on Thursday, the 3rd ult. The work selected was "The Golden Legend," of which the public evinces as yet no signs of tiring, notwithstanding the many times it has been heard within the past twelve months. It was a case of love at first sight, and time has only served to cement the affection. We shall resist the temptation to say another word in favour of Sir Arthur Sullivan's masterpiece, and only speak of the performance which, in some respects, was of uncommon merit. Mr. Barnby's choir distinguished itself more than usual, the rendering of the Prologue and the Evening Prayer being good examples of choral singing. Madame Nordica's embodiment of Elsie is a remarkably artistic creation, carefully considered and extremely sympathetic; no more satisfactory exponent of the part has yet appeared. Mr. Lloyd was, as usual, perfect in the music of Prince Henry, but here unqualified praise must end. Mrs. Belle Cole was not very successful as Ursula, her fine voice being badly produced, and Mr. Henschel did not appear to advantage as Lucifer.

For some reason hard to divine, "Israel in Egypt" had not been performed for several years at the Albert Hall until the 24th ult., when it was revived in presence of a very large audience, the cheaper parts of the building being more than usually thronged. Except at the Crystal Palace, Handel's colossal work cannot be rendered so effectively as at South Kensington, and as on the present occasion it was received with much enthusiasm there is reason to believe that it will not again be permitted to drop out of the repertory. Very great credit is due to Mr. Barnby for the way in which most of the choral numbers were rendered. It was not so much the machinelike accuracy, as the vigour and spirit with which all the more important choruses were attacked which excited the assemblage. The 800 singers obeyed the word of command like a perfectly drilled regiment, and we have never, even at a Handel Festival, heard the Hailstone Chorus, "He spake the word," and "The Horse and his Rider" given with more electrical effect. It is impossible, however, to justify the violence done to Handel's intentions in assigning "The Lord is a Man of war" to the tenors and basses of the chorus. True the effect was very fine, but the principle involved compels us to disagree with Mr. Barnby's course. A first-rate orchestra could doubtless interpret a Beethoven Quartet with perfect finish, but who save an egotistical conductor would venture upon such an outrage? Unnecessary tampering with a composer's score is to be deprecated, because it establishes a bad precedent and opens the door to all sorts of abuses. We have only to add that Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, and Mr. Lloyd sang their respective solos in a way that entirely justified the liberal applause of the audience. The value of Dr. Stainer's assistance at the organ was noticeable in a marked degree.

NOVELLO'S ORATORIO CONCERTS.

For the opening Concert of the season, given in St. James's Hall on the 10th ult., Dr. A. C Mackenzie's "Jubilee Ode," written for the special performance at the Crystal Palace, together with Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride," were presented under the bâton of Mr Randegger, who had kindly undertaken the duties of Conductor for this Concert. The performance was in every way most successful. The band, led by Mr. J. T. Carrodus, was composed of the best and most experienced players, and the chorus, reinforced by a number of additional voices, sang not only with a freshness and sweetness of tone, a rare accomplishment for a choral body, but also with an attack and vigour which testified to their personal interest in the work. Madame Albani, who was in superb voice, literally held her audience spell-bound by her splendid declamation and expression in the noble song, "More than crown of Monarch precious." The spell was broken at the conclusion by the hands of the audience. The applause, which was both spontaneous and cordial, was a conclusive testimony of the effect of the music and of the skill of the artist. The tenor solos were entrusted to Mr. Harper Kearton, who sang with more care than energy. His excellent voice only wanted an access of warmth, similar to that which Madame Albani infused into her vocalisation in the Ode and in the "Spectre's Bride," to have made his efforts very successful. In this last-named work, which is steadily growing in popular favour, the voice of Mr. Santley was added to those singers whose names have been mentioned—his admirable declamatory method being employed to great advantage in the interpretation of the narrative—to complete the cast. Here, as before, the chorus-singing was a specially distinguishing feature of the performance. As a whole, the performance was a worthy beginning of what promises to be a most interesting season.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The Association bearing this venerable name has apparently awakened to the fact that it is necessary to keep itself abreast of younger institutions in the matter of policy in order to retain the requisite measure of public patronage. In the list of works to be performed at the six Concerts this season, novelties, actual or comparative, form half of the scheme; while another sign of the times may be noted in the fact that three English works are named—that is to say, "The Golden Legend," Mr. Cowen's "Ruth," and Mr. Cusins's "Jubilee Cantata." The Society may also take credit to itself that it was first in the field with Signor Bottesini's Oratorio "The Garden of Olivet," which formed the most important feature of the first Concert on Thursday, the 17th ult. Unhappily, a mixed programme rarely commends itself to the public, and the present occasion forms no exception to the rule, St. James's Hall being by no means full. The special claims of the work to the approval of musicians were fully set forth in our notice of the Norwich Festival, and if the frigid Norfolk amateurs received it with indifference the composer had no reason to complain of its reception at the hands of a more enlightened London audience. The flow of refined, expressive melody which pervades the "devotional Oratorio" was fully appreciated, several numbers being very heartily applauded, in spite of a performance which in some respects left much to desire. The Society, of course, did well in asking Signor Bottesini to direct his work, but both the choir and orchestra seemed unnerved by his noisy method of beating time, and much coarseness, and not a few errors, were the result. Amends were made by the perfect singing of the soloists, Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, the same that "created" their parts at Norwich. Mr. Cusins's brief Jubilee Cantata, which followed, had only been heard previously at a State Concert. It is a comparatively modest setting of some Scripture texts, the solos for soprano and tenor being tuneful, and the choruses studiously free from contrapuntal elaboration. Though without pretentions to originality it is, on the whole, a pleasing work, and as it went well under the composer's direction, it was favourably received. Mendelssohn's beautiful Cantata or Hymn, "Lauda Sion," which is too seldom heard, concluded the Concert. Mr. W. H. Cummings, the Society's Conductor, upon stepping on the platform to direct it, had a warm reception from the choir. The performance of "The Golden Legend" on the 8th inst. will be preceded by a short selection from Sir George Macfarren's "King David," in memory of the deceased composer.

LONDON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

ORCHESTRAL performances in the Metropolis during the winter are not so numerous that we can afford to regard lightly the success or failure of Mr. Henschel's enterprise, commenced with the above title last season. We fear the result of the first series of Concerts was not very encouraging, and it is understood that upon the support accorded during the present season will depend the continuance of the undertaking. It will therefore be advisable to assume the useful, if somewhat ungrateful, rôle of the candid friend, and while giving full credit for all the good points in the London Symphony Concerts, to call attention to those matters in which improvement may advisedly be made. In one important respect Mr. Henschel has grown wise by experience. He perceives that the public has no predilection for novelties, simply because they are novelties, and his programmes will for the future be planned on a more popular basis than was the case last year. No fault whatever can be found with the selections at the first two Concerts, which are all we can notice this month. On the first occasion the principal items were Beethoven's C minor Symphony and the Overtures to "Euryanthe" and "Tannhäuser." Mr. Henschel does not publish a list of his orchestra, but he has no reason to be ashamed of it. At the same time, there were points in the rendering of the works named calculated to provoke difference of opinion. The Conductor may have authority for the slow tempo adopted in the last movement of the Symphony, as well as for the rapid pace at which the Pilgrims' Chorus in Wagner's Overture was taken, but in both cases there was certainly a loss of effect. The Scandinavian composer, Grieg, has written nothing more charming than his two Melodies for Strings (Op. 34). They are entitled "Hjertesar" (Wounded Heart) and "Varen" (Spring), and were originally settings of two poems by A. O. Vinje. In their present form they are remarkably attractive, being full of Norwegian character, and deserve to be heard again. Mr. Santley introduced a scena from Glinka's opera "Russlan and Ludmila," and one of Hans Sachs' monologues. The former is an old-fashioned but remarkably vigorous piece, and it was splendidly sung.

The programme of the second Concert, on Wednesday afternoon, the 23rd ult., was evidently designed with a view to please the general public, and for that reason it may be dismissed with brief notice, every item being more or less familiar to connoisseurs. There is no need to describe how Madame Néruda plays Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and with regard to Schubert's unfinished Symphony in B minor, Liszt's picturesque Symphonic poem "Les Préludes," Mendelssohn's Overture to "Camacho's Wedding," and Wagner's delicate little sketch "Träume" it will be sufficient to say that they received an adequate amount of justice from Mr. Henschel's fine orchestra. Wagner's early Symphony in C was announced to be performed for the first time in England on the 29th ult., too late for notice in our present number.

MONDAY AND SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE work done so far at these Concerts has been mainly of a routine character, and our remarks on the performances may therefore have the merit of brevity. In order to give a good start to the Saturday series on October 29 a Beethoven programme was provided, the result, as usual, being to fill St. James's Hall from end to end. The works selected were the Quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4), the Trio in E flat (Op. 70, No. 2), the Violin Romance in G (Op. 40), and the Sonata, with Funeral March, in A flat (Op. 26). Perhaps with the idea of showing their high appreciation, the audience insisted on encoring the two items last-named, Madame Néruda responding with the companion Romance in F (Op. 50) while Mr. Hallé, who had interpreted the Sonata in his very best manner, contented himself with one of Schubert's "Momens Musicales." Mr. Santley, who was the vocalist of the afternoon, introduced songs by other composers, perhaps for the sake of variety. He was in fine voice, and has never done fuller justice to Handel's "Del minacciar del vento" and Gounod's "Le Nom de Marie." His many admirers, however, would be glad were he to enlarge the repertory to which he restricts himself at these Concerts.

On Monday, October 31, little Hofmann made his second and final appearance, and there was again an enormous gathering, some being unable to obtain admission. It is quite possible, however, that those who heard the gifted lad for the first time on this occasion were disappointed, for technically his rendering of Beethoven's "Sonata Pathétique" left much to desire. He seemed more flurried and nervous than usual, probably from over-exertion, and played many false notes. The audience, however, betrayed no outward sign of discontent, but, on the contrary, gave the child-pianist a great reception, and insisted upon an encore. He also played Mozart's Sonata in D, for two pianofortes, with his father, but he does not, as yet, venture upon concerted works with strings. Signor Piatti played Locatelli's quaint Sonata for Violoncello in D, in his own inimitable fashion, it being his first appearance this season, and the programme likewise contained Schumann's Quartet in A minor (Op. 41, No. 1). Miss Lena Little was the vocalist, introducing among other things Wagner's poetical little song "Träume," founded on a theme from "Tristan und Isolde."

Mdlle. Janotha, who has been absent for three seasons, has returned to us, and on Saturday, the 5th ult., made her reappearance, choosing Schumann's now very popular work, the "Carnaval," for her solo. She was warmly received, but at first she seemed agitated and nervous, and the preamble was played rather confusedly. Later on, however, she recovered herself, and some of the later numbers were charmingly rendered. There was no concerted work with pianoforte in the programme, two String Quartets being given instead. These were Mendelssohn's in E flat (Op. 44, No. 3), the piquant Scherzo of which was encored, and Haydn's lively and almost comic work in C (Op. 33, No. 3). Signor Piatti played two pieces, Canto religioso and Siciliano, from his own pen, and might have played more had he been so minded. Miss Thudichum was also much applauded for her tasteful rendering of Sullivan's "Orpheus with his lute," and two of Kjerulf's quaint Swedish songs.

On the following Monday Mdlle. Janotha again appeared as pianist, and performed Mendelssohn's Variations Sérieuses, as well as taking part in Schumann's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat (Op. 47). If the truth may be told, her rendering of the former was anything but acceptable to the more thoughtful among the audience. It is certain that she indulged in extravagancies of style more appropriate to a virtuoso than an artist, and quite out of keeping with Mendelssohn's somewhat severe work. Further, when asked for an encore, Mdlle. Janotha responded with a bravura piece scarcely suitable for a classical Concert. It was pleasant to note, however, that the apparent deterioration was only temporary, for her share in the Quartet was everything that could be desired in the way of chasteness and purity of style. Included in the programme were Madame Néruda's favourite Corelli Sonata in D, and Mozart's Quartet in F, generally known as No. 8. This work is noteworthy as being the last composed by the great master, and also for the prominence of the violoncello part, being one of the three quartets written for Frederick William II., who was a skilful performer on the instrument. Mr. Herbert Thorndike may be commended for his vocal selections, which comprised a charming but little known song called "The Dream" by Haydn, and two clever songs by Miss Maude V. White.

Unreserved commendation may be accorded to Mdlle. Janotha for her rendering of Beethoven's Sonata in D (Op. 28), generally known as the "Pastorale," at the Concert of Saturday, the 12th ult. It was a pure example of classical pianoforte playing, without any straining after effects or exaggeration of style. The audience were evidently delighted, but they were unreasonable in exacting an encore after a lengthy work. A brilliant performance was given of Beethoven's early and melodious Quintet (Op. 4) in B flat, under the leadership of Herr Straus, who gave as a solo a Romance in A, by Max Bruch (Op. 42). Rubinstein's Sonata in D, for piano and violoncello (Op. 18), completed the list of instrumental works. Mrs. Henschel was very acceptable in songs by Grieg as well as in Purcell's "Nymphs and Shepherds," though her hurried final cadence in the latter is a mistake, being quite out of character with the music of the period.

There is very little to be said concerning the Concert of the 14th ult., all the works presented being familiar to the habitués of these Concerts. It would be little short of an impertinence to criticise such works as Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74), Mozart's Duet in G, for violin and viola, and Haydn's Trio in C. Mdlle. Janotha was once more the pianist, her solo being Chopin's Barcarole in F sharp (Op. 60), the rendering of which was generally commendable if a little hard and unsympathetic. An encore being as usual demanded, she gave the Polish composer's Berceuse in D flat, with exquisite delicacy and finish. The vocalist was Miss Marguerite Hall, who was only partially successful in Schubert's "Die junge Nonne," but who deservedly won the favour of the audience in songs by Kjerulf and Miss Mary Carmichael, being encored in the last-named composer's "June Song."

A novelty at these Concerts, though not entirely new to London amateurs, was Brahms's Sonata in A, for piano and violin (Op. 100), which was played by Mr. Hallé and Madame Néruda at the Concert of Saturday, the 19th ult. When this work was first heard at Mr. Hallé's Concerts last summer, everyone was as surprised as delighted with its flow of bright genial melody, as Brahms is not always, nor indeed often, in this mood. His second Piano and Violin Sonata will therefore rank among his most attractive if not his finest works, and it is likely to become a greater favourite than its predecessor in G. Mendelssohn's ever-welcome Quartet in E flat (Op. 12) opened the Concert, the piquant canzonetta being, as usual, encored, and Fibich's Quartet in E minor (Op. 11) closed it. There is so much of promise in this work that musicians would be glad to make acquaintance with other efforts by the Bohemian composer. Mr. Hallé played Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, and Mr. Thorndike repeated his artistic rendering of Haydn's beautiful song "The Dream."

The Concert of the following Monday is the last we can notice this month. It began with Brahms's second and more elaborate Sextet in G, for strings (Op. 36), which received a magnificent interpretation. The rendering of the Finale by Madame Néruda and her associates, among whom were our English players Messrs. Gibson and Howell, was as near perfection as possible. Mdlle. Janotha injured the effect of Beethoven's Sonata in D minor (Op. 31, No. 2) by taking the whole of it too fast. Adagio became Andante con moto and Allegretto, Presto. The dreamy poetical slow movement especially suffered. Songs by Schumann, Brahms, and Bizet were charmingly rendered by Mrs. Henschel, and Schubert's favourite Trio in B flat (Op. 99) concluded the performance.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

A Concert performance of Mozart's "Don Giovanni," being the only available mode in which homage could be paid to the genius of the composer on the occasion of the hundredth anniversary of the production of that opera, the rendering of which was given on October 29, was, under the circumstances, highly creditable. Of the part taken by the orchestra it is scarcely necessary to speak. The Overture and accompaniments were admirably played, though in the latter case a diminution of power would have been occasionally desirable. Of the vocalists, Miss Annie Marriott, who was in good voice and threw the greatest earnestness into her singing, was the most successful. Mdlle. Gambogi made a very fair Zerlina, and had the great advantage of being at home in the Tuscan tongue, which the other soloists pronounced in the Stratford-atte Bowe fashion. Mr. King, a sound and conscientious artist, was sadly mis placed as Don Juan, and made matters worse by the slow speed at which he took the serenade. Mr. Brereton was energetic as Leporello, and Mr. Egbert Roberts occasionally sang in tune as the Commendatore On the other hand, Mr. Probert's sweet voice was heard to great advantage in "Dalla sua pace" and "Il mio tesoro." Mr. Probert, however, needs greater animation of delivery, and, let us add, a greater respect for the text of the great masters.

In a test work like Beethoven's Violin Concerto, where there are opportunities for the display of every quality requisite to make a great player, we think it the sign of a fine artist to be sparing of the introduction of adventitious ornament. M. César Thomson, who made his first appearance in England at the fifth Concert of the series, on the 5th ult., evidently thought otherwise, for he availed himself of all three opportunities to introduce well-nigh interminable cadences, which certainly served to advertise his remarkable technique, but was otherwise inappropriate to the context and irritating to the reverent auditor. M. Thomson produces a sweet and round tone, and his playing is marked by a certain individuality of conception. But the rendering of the Concerto, as a whole, was wanting in dignity. His frequent and inexcusable use of the rubato rendered it very hard for the orchestra to co-operate with him, and the dirge-like speed at which he took the Rondo robbed the final movement of life and brightness. With M. Thomson we feel that the cadences are everything, not Beethoven. His other contribution was Paganini's Fantasia "Non più mesta," in which his display of virtuosity was highly appreciated by the orchestra. Such testimony guarantees his technical dexterity, but of the magic which interprets the emotion-suggesting side of music he has but little.

An interesting novelty was heard for the first time in the shape of a Concert Overture, "Land of the fountain and the flood," by Mr. Hamish MacCunn, who has recently completed his studies at the Royal College. The work—which is spirited and bold in conception and brilliantly scored—was finely played and enthusiastically received. Whether it be Brahms or a beginner, Mr. Manns takes equal care in the rehearsal of a new work. Mr. MacCunn, who was summoned to the platform, must have felt indeed happy at the performance of his work. The Italian Symphony constituted the pièce de résistance, and was splendidly played, as it always is under Mr. Manns. Yet another new-comer was heard in Mrs. Belle Cole—who has a really fine contralto of rich quality and considerable compass and flexibility, to set against the drawbacks of possessing no school and a faulty taste in ornamentation. Her natural resources are so great that, with judicious guidance, they should render her a valuable addition to the ranks of our concert-singers. Mrs. Cole deserves, in particular, to be cautioned against the temptation to exhibit her extensive range by taking high notes, which were on this occasion generally sharp. The Concert, which was preceded by the Dead March in "Saul," in memory of Sir George Macfarren, who was buried the same morning, concluded with a fine performance of Dvorák's beautiful Scherzo Capriccioso.

The performance of Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique" and "Lélio," on the 12th ult., calls for nothing but praise. The orchestra has never been heard to greater advantage, whether in the passages which demand fire and even fury, or in those tissues of gossamer-like embroidery, of which the accompaniment to the Chorus of Spirits of the Air in "Lélio" affords the most conspicuous example. The beautiful Bal movement in the "Symphonie Fantastique," in which Berlioz proves—as Dvorák has done in his Scherzo Capriccioso—how much can be done by the symphonic treatment of a waltz theme, was given with delightful entrain and appreciation of the tempo rubato—that stumbling-block of English dancers. For "Lélio," an appreciative analysis had been prepared by Mr. Corder, whose own predilection for the "Tempest" as a subject for musical treatment has doubtless enabled him specially to appreciate Berlioz's choice. The ballad "after Goethe" was admirably sung by Mr. Lloyd; Mr. King gave the bandit's song; while the strange monologue which accompanies and alternates with the musical numbers was declaimed in a condensed form by Mr. James Fernandez. To understand the point of many of Berlioz's remarks, one needs to be well acquainted with his life, his aspirations, and his grievances. The address to the chorus and orchestra, however, given with great gusto by Mr. Fernandez, was greatly relished by the executants, and greeted with explosions of pardonable merriment.

Schubert's great Symphony in C major, which set the Philharmonic band laughing in 1844 when Mendelssohn was rehearsing it—with the result that he withdrew not only the Symphony, but his own "Ruy Blas" Overture as well—has now become so favourite a piece at the Crystal Palace, where it was first performed just thirty years ago, that no season is complete without a performance of it. That given on the 19th ult., the anniversary of the composer's death, was in all respects worthy of the occasion, the music, and the executants. One felt, in listening to its "heavenly length," that Schumann's glowing eulogies were fully deserved. The slow movement, crammed full of beauties, illustrated better than we ever remember his admirable remark that in this work the instruments all seem to speak with human voices. Mr. Manns received a well-merited ovation at the close of the final movement. Schubert was also represented by a bright and graceful Overture in E minor, performed for the first time; a selection from "Rosamunde," comprising the Entr'acte in B flat, the Ballet air in G, exquisitely played, and the Romance "Der vollmond strahlt," sung with much refinement by Mrs. Henschel, who later on gave the songs "Stimme der Liebe" and "Haidenröslein," her husband accompanying her in masterly style. The former proved somewhat trying to the singer, but we have never heard "Haidenröslein" sung with greater delicacy and grace. Herr Franz Néruda, who appeared for the first time at these Concerts, contributed a Concertstück for violoncello and orchestra of his own composition, besides short pieces by Popper. None of these works call for any comment, nor did the execution of them prove the soloist to be possessed of any exceptional powers.

LONDON WIND INSTRUMENT UNION.

Under this title an Association has been formed, with Signor Carlo Ducci as Director, for the performance of works for wind instruments. The success of a series of Concerts given at the Royal Academy of Music last season for the same purpose may have suggested the present enterprise. The series now in progress consists of six performances at the Continental Gallery, 157, New Bond Street, on Friday evenings. The members of the Union are Mr. J. Radcliff (flute), Mr. H. G. Lebon (oboe), Mr. Gomez (clarinet), Mr. T. E. Mann (horn), Mr. W. B. Wotton (bassoon), and Mr Ducci (piano). Whatever popular success the undertaking may achieve, musicians cannot fail to regard it with satisfaction, calculated as it is to bring to light a number of fine works hitherto neglected. For example, at the first Concert, on the 11th ult., we heard Onslow's Quintet in F (Op. 81), Beethoven's in E flat (Op. 16), and Weber's Grand Duo Concertant in E flat, for piano and clarinet, three compositions far too good to be consigned to oblivion. Onslow's work, if not purely original, is distinguished by the refined and elegant musicianship which characterises most of the French musician's efforts, and Beethoven's genial and tuneful Quintet would become a popular favourite if it were better known. On the whole, the performances were highly satisfactory, the English members of the Union, however, excelling their foreign companions. Mr. Gomez is an extremely brilliant performer, but his tone is inclined to be harsh. It is impossible to speak very favourably of Mrs. Belle Cole's rendering of airs by Handel and Gluck. Her voice is not under perfect control, and her scales are far from perfect. Further training would remove these defects. At the second Concert the leading items were a melodious Concertstück, entitled "Idyllische Scene," by Rietz, for quintet of wind instruments, with piano accompaniment, and Mozart's Quintet in E flat. Movements of Concertos for flute, by Macfarren, and clarinet, by Spohr, were included. The vocalist, Madame Cornélie Dalnoky, displayed a fine voice in Weber's "Softly sighs" and Wagner's "Elizabeth's Prayer," but she did not appear to recognise the fact that she was singing in a small room and not in a large theatre.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

At the November Meeting of the Musical Association, on the 7th ult., a paper on "Musical Beats and their relation to Consonance and Dissonance" was, in the unavoidable absence of the author, Mr. J. Heffernan, read by the Assistant Secretary. The lecturer, after remarking that the number of calculated beats was no guide to Consonance or Dissonance, referred to the fact that Helmholtz assigned the roughness or smoothness of intervals within a minor third, and of those beyond a minor third, to different causes; but he (the lecturer) held that in each case there was a common cause—viz., the ability or otherwise of the ear to damp its own vibrations. An audible beat only existed when each note had completed an integral number of vibrations, and hence in the minor sixth, from C to A flat in the middle octave, there were, at Scheibler's pitch, only 52 4-5 coincident beats per second as against 158 2-5 calculated beats. If coincidences struck the tympanum rapidly, it could not damp its own vibrations—it was continuously agitated, and Consonance was the result. If, however, it was intermittently agitated, then Dissonance was the result. The mean between the major second with 33 beats, and the minor third with 52 4-5 beats might be taken at about 40 beats, and there was reason to think that at that point Dissonance ended and Consonance began, a theory that received support from the researches of Helmholtz into the commencement of pitch. In the course of his paper, Mr. Heffernan gave the results of various experiments he had made with tuning forks.

In the discussion which followed, Mr. D. J. Blaikley said much depended as to whether the forks used were the ordinary commercial ones, or those specially made for acoustical experiments. Mr. Heffernan's conclusions seemed to depend upon the absence of overtones; but with the common forks in use there was no difficulty in hearing as far as the fifth and sixth upper partials. In tuning harmoniums for the purpose of standard pitch, he had tuned by the eighth, ninth, and twelfth partials in addition to the usual fifths and octaves, and he had no reason to doubt the correctness of the rule for calculating beats. Mr. Heffernan's paper was, however, evidently the outcome of much independent thought and experiment.

MASTER JOSEF HOFMANN'S RECITALS.

"He often took leave, but seemed loath to depart." Prior's line might apply to the Polish child-pianist, whose performances have formed the first musical sensation of the season 1887-8. Whatever reception awaits him on the other side of the Atlantic—and there can scarcely be any doubt that our excitement-loving cousins will rise to the occasion—it cannot be placed to the charge of the more sober-minded English public that they did not sufficiently appreciate the wonderful little boy who has shown once more how mysterious a quality is musical genius, and how independent it is of age, bodily physique, and experience. Throughout the country the record is the same; in not one place that young Hofmann visited was there anything like apathy shown towards him, and in the aggregate it is said he drew larger numbers of people to his Recitals than any other living pianist has done, Rubinstein not excepted. We are more particularly concerned at present with the two farewell Recitals which were given at St. James's Hall on the 7th and 14th ult. On each occasion the scene outside and inside the building was very remarkable. Though it was announced by advertisement that all the tickets were sold, hundreds of people came only to be disappointed, and at the final Recital they began to assemble six hours before the time of commencement. Thus, legitimate interest developed into a perfect craze, and if it is possible to spoil Hofmann with effusive admiration, he is as good as doomed. We will, however, not anticipate evil. The programme of his third Recital consisted entirely of minor pieces, including some trifles from his own pen, in which the germ of individuality may be noted. Another display of improvisation was attempted, the theme given him being from a Sonata of Dussek; but the result was not remarkable. Saint-Saëns's clever but difficult Variations on a Theme by Beethoven, and Mozart's Rondo in A minor, were two of the most noteworthy performances of the afternoon. His reading of the latter was highly suggestive and original, without being extravagant.

On the whole, however, there was more calling for astonishment and admiration in his final Recital. No fewer than nine pieces by Chopin were in the programme, and some of these were played with exquisite charm of touch, and an insight into the composer's spirit truly marvellous. We may specially mention the rendering of the Nocturnes in F sharp and E, and the Waltz in A flat (Op. 42). The repetition performance of the "Moonlight" Sonata showed that Hofmann is gaining facility in octave playing. The last item was an atrocious dis-arrangement of Weber's "Invitation à la Valse," for two pianos. This the audience had the good sense to receive coldly, and there was therefore no final demonstration, or enthusiastic leavetaking. It appears that the report as to Hofmann's approaching temporary retirement was erroneous, and he will return to England next year. The best friends of the lad will not receive this announcement with unmixed satisfaction.

BOROUGH OF HACKNEY CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

It was natural that this Society should take the earliest opportunity of presenting its patrons with an important new work by its esteemed Conductor, Mr. Ebenezer Prout, and accordingly, three weeks after "The Red Cross Knight" saw the light at Huddersfield, it was brought to a hearing at the Shoreditch Town Hall, that is to say, on Monday, October 31. The event was evidently regarded with much interest, the attendance being only limited in numbers by the capacity of the room, while the enthusiastic applause which prevailed throughout the evening showed that the audience was highly delighted with the work. We have already dealt so fully with Mr. Prout's dramatic Cantata, that there is no occasion to enter into further details; but it may be said that the impression it leaves after performance is that the pre-eminently English character of the music will render it attractive to a very large circle of amateurs. Musicianship is displayed in almost every bar, and the treatment of the orchestra displays consummate knowledge of effect. With regard to the performance, the first mention is due to the choir, which sang splendidly from first to last. The hearts of the members were in their work, and they acquitted themselves almost to perfection, the quality of tone being also, we think, superior to that of previous years. Miss Clara Leighton was slightly overweighted in the soprano part, but she sang with commendable artistic earnestness, and Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. H. Piercy, Mr. Bantock Pierpoint, and Mr. Watkin Mills were all fully equal to their duties.

WALTHAMSTOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Whatever the outcome of the effort, we cannot deny our sincere admiration for the earnestness of purpose and well-directed energy that Walthamstow has shown in the organisation of its first Musical Festival. It may be premature to talk about removing off-hand the stigma which is said to rest on Essex, of being "the most unmusical county in England," especially as the portion of that county wherein Walthamstow stands cannot be regarded as less of a metropolitan suburb than Sydenham or Greenwich. Nevertheless, if there be many gentlemen in Essex possessing the enthusiasm and generosity, not to speak of the ability, displayed by Mr. J. F. H. Read, the object in question will very soon be accomplished. For it was, in point of fact, to Mr. Read that Walthamstow chiefly owed the means for the interesting performances given on the 21st, 24th, and 26th ult. An influential committee gave much valuable help; but it was Mr. Read who, at his own expense, erected the fine new Music Hall where the Concerts were held, who trained and conducted the forces engaged, and who composed the new work, without which no undertaking that aspires to the title of a Musical Festival can fairly be considered complete. The building is admirably constructed for its purpose; it forms a lofty, airy Concert-room, and the acoustic properties are as nearly as possible perfect. The size of the orchestra can be gathered from the fact that, when occupied by a full band and a chorus of about 180, it was by no means crowded. Regarding the personnel of these bodies we may say that the former, led by Mr. J. T. Carrodus, included a goodly proportion of professional players, while the latter was drawn from the choral societies of the surrounding district. All things considered, it was a remarkably good choir, the timbre being bright and the volume of tone satisfying. Another time, however, a trifle more discrimination must be shown as to the exclusion of rough and unpleasant voices, whose resonant power does not atone for their unsympathetic quality; and if a few sopranos with good high notes can be found to take their place, so much the better. Wisely enough, a familiar work was selected for the opening Concert, and the performance of "Elijah" was in most respects extremely creditable. The solos were sung by Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Lucas Williams, while Mr. Read, who conducts with a clear, decided beat, held his forces well under control. The weather was unpleasantly foggy and damp, but the attendance, save in the higher priced seats, was crowded.

At the second Concert a full audience gathered to hear the novelty of the Festival, a dramatic Cantata entitled "Harold," written by the Rev. F. W. Vernham (the hon. secretary of the meeting), and composed by Mr. J. F. H. Read. It is a work of important dimensions and takes up a full evening's programme. The libretto, as the author explains in his preface, is a dramatised metrical version of Bulwer Lytton's well-known historical romance of the same name. The leading episodes are effectively embodied in four scenes and an epilogue, only half-a-dozen characters in all being introduced. Scene I. depicts the love and happiness of Harold (tenor) and Edith (soprano), the patriotic readiness of the Saxons, and an incantation wherein Hilda (contralto) seeks to know the fate in store for the future Saxon King. Scene II. deals with the preparations of the Duke William (baritone) to secure the crown of England, and the oath which the imprisoned Harold takes to aid him in that task. Scene III. describes Harold's coronation in Westminster Abbey. Scene IV. illustrates the contrast between the Saxon and the Norman camps on the eve of the battle, with the farewell meeting of Harold and Edith; and the Epilogue depicts the burial of Harold at Waltham—for popular tradition asserts that the bodies of Harold and of his brothers were there interred after the battle by their mother, Githa. There is no real dramatic connection between these detached scenes, but it is sufficiently suggested by the text, which on the whole shows admirable refinement, feeling, and variety of rhythm. We have not space to enter into a close analysis of Mr. Read's setting, the musicianly attributes of which must, nevertheless, excite surprise in all who know that the composer has never followed his art as a profession, and that he is now well past the prime of life. The score of this Cantata reveals a surprising measure of contrapuntal knowledge, and no little skill in adapting contrapuntal forms to the expression of various kinds of sentiment. A certain monotony of treatment is undeniably apparent, and Mr. Read has, perhaps, shown an overwilling fondness for accompanying his voices with wind instruments; but, on the whole, his effects are very well managed, and his extensive use of the Leitmotif—even though the themes themselves be traceable to familiar sources—imparts musical as well as dramatic cohesion to the work. Some of the solo and concerted numbers are of extended dimensions, but the melodic charm of Mr. Read's music lies principally in his choruses, which are not only cleverly written, but effective. Here again was found the most satisfactory feature of the performance, the choir singing throughout with efficiency and spirit, while on the other hand the rendering of the orchestration was marred by some serious blemishes. Mrs. Hutchinson and Miss Hilda Wilson did ample justice to the music of Edith and Hilda, the male parts being less creditably sustained by Mr. John Probert, Mr. Lucas Williams, and Mr. J. E. Lawler. Mr. Read conducted his Cantata with commendable energy and skill, and was frequently greeted with rapturous plaudits by a proud and contented audience.

At the third and final Concert, a programme made up of miscellaneous items was carried out, and brought the Festival to a successful termination.

THE CAMBRIDGE "ŒDIPUS REX."

The Theatre Royal, Cambridge, was opened on Tuesday, the 22nd ult., and kept open during the rest of the week, for a performance of the "Œdipus Tyrannus" of Sophocles in the original Greek, by members of the University. It is the fashion at Cambridge to have these revivals once in two years, and now four plays have been performed—namely, "Ajax" (Sophocles), "The Birds" (Aristophanes), "The Eumenides" (Æschylus), and that which forms the subject of our present notice. In each case the choral odes have been sung to music specially written for the occasion either by Sir George Macfarren, Mr. Hubert Parry, or Dr. Villiers Stanford, and thus the Cambridge dramatic revels have a particular interest for the musical amateur, who sees accumulating examples of a very interesting application of his art to the classic stage. He may be gratified, moreover, by the fact that the work begun by Mendelssohn with "Antigone" and "Œdipus at Colonos" has been taken up by countrymen of his own.

It is only needful for us here to speak generally of the dramatic features in the latest revival, while, with regard to the particular play selected, we can do no better than refer the enquirer to a little volume entitled "Sophocles" in Mr. Goss Blackwood's "Ancient Classics for English Readers." There he will find set forth in all needful detail the terrible story of the house of Laius, and be able to trace the workings of Fate through the great dramas "Œdipus Rex," "Œdipus at Colonos," and "Antigone." The representation of "Œdipus Rex" presented much the same completeness of detail and measure of merit as did that of the "Eumenides" two years ago. At all points appeared the hand of careful preparation, and signs of a resolution to leave nothing undone that could possibly minister to success. Mr. John O'Connor prepared a "set," showing the palace of Œdipus—the only scene in the play—admirable dresses were designed and made at Cambridge, under the direction of a committee, and the stage arrangements were carefully supervised by Mr. John Willis Clarke, M.A. (Trinity), while Mr. Hermann Vezin instructed the actors. So, all working together with a will, success was easily secured. True, "Œdipus Tyrannus" does not afford opportunity for the varied and beautiful scenes that abound in the "Eumenides," and, so far, the stage representation had not the attraction of two years ago. But that was not the fault of the performers, who did all that opportunity allowed them to do and earned the heartiest praise. The principal characters were thus distributed: Œdipus, Mr. J. H. G. Randolph; Jocasta, Mr. C. Platts; Creon, Mr. F. T. Millar; Teiresias, Mr. H. Head; Priest of Zeus, Mr. L. Ford; Messenger from Corinth, Mr. M. R. James; A Herdsman, Mr. T. A. Bertram; A Messenger from the Palace, Mr. H. B. Smith; Chorus leader, Mr. R. R. Ottley. It may honestly be said that all the gentlemen concerned gave evidence of well-directed ability, but the honours were carried off by Mr. Randolph and Mr. Platts, on whom fell the greatest responsibility, and to whom became due the loudest applause.

Dr. Stanford, who conducted the musical part of the performance, was also the composer of the choruses, and trainer of the singers. He, therefore, bore the entire charge of his department; but we may not push this too far, and hold him responsible for an inadequate orchestra and a chorus that, with the best intentions, was not always as precise as could have been desired. There is no accommodation in the theatre for a complete band of instruments, and everybody knows that amateur singers, who have to act as well as sing, take some time to settle down calmly to their work, and do themselves justice. Dr. Stanford's music includes sixteen numbers, some of which, as the Prelude and the accompaniments to spoken dialogue, are purely orchestral. With regard to the work as a whole, we may question whether it possesses a sufficiently distinctive and varied character. The composer provided much the same for the "Eumenides," and in hearing—this is our personal experience—attention gradually subsides as there seems less and less chance of further reward for it. We must, of course, take unavoidable circumstances into consideration, and especially the fact that the choral odes are much more didactic than dramatic, and, though extremely vigorous and picturesque, lack the stimulus to imagination and opportunities for effect which dramatic scenes afford. There is also need to reflect that the choruses exact a certain method of treatment in order to guard against the weariness of extreme length, that the music must be for male voices only, and that it is thought desirable at Cambridge to write mainly in unison with much melodic simplicity. Taking all these considerations into account, it is not difficult to see that Dr. Stanford has discharged his task with much skill, and got out of his resources all that could reasonably be expected. The Prelude, especially, is an admirable number, its parts hanging together well, despite the dovetailing of Leitmotiven and distinctive passages from the body of the work. Some of the "mélodrame" music is also effective, though the means employed are often unnecessarily full. The choruses vary considerably in merit, some of them, we cannot but think, being deficient in thematic dignity. Perhaps the finest number closes the second act. This is full of distinction, and marked even by grandeur of expression. But comparisons apart, and having all circumstances in view, we gladly and applausively recognise the great intelligence, earnestness, and skill shown by the music to "Œdipus Tyrannus."

CONSECRATION OF TRURO CATHEDRAL.

The Consecration of Truro Cathedral took place on the 3rd ult., and as it is unnecessary to repeat the accounts of the ceremony, which were given in the daily papers, the present remarks are confined to the musical portion of the services. On the Consecration Day the choir of the Cathedral was assisted by choristers, lay clerks, and vicars-choral of the Cathedral churches of Bristol, Exeter, Gloucester, Hereford, Lichfield, Oxford (Christ Church), and Wells; and of the parish church of St. Peter's, Eaton Square.

The organ, built by Mr. Henry Willis, consists of four manuals, and is very similar to the organ in St. Paul's Cathedral. It has pneumatic action, pneumatic pistons, tubular pneumatic for the pedals, and amongst other late improvements there is a pneumatic lever to the great and swell organs made according to the patent of Vincent Willis, called the "Floating Lever." Through this lever the couplers are brought into action without adding weight to the touch. The organ is placed in the chamber prepared for it in the triforium on the north side of the choir, and is blown by two hydraulic engines in the triforium on the east side of the north transept.

At the Consecration Service Mr. Lloyd, Organist of Christ Church, Oxford, presided at the organ, and Mr. G. R. Sinclair, the Organist and Choirmaster of the Cathedral, conducted.

The Cathedral has fine acoustic properties, and with the instrumental and choral forces mentioned above the service was quite worthy of the occasion. The performance of the Veni Creator (Attwood), and of the Antiphon, "Who am I," which was composed for the occasion by Mr. C. H. Lloyd, were among the most impressive parts of the service. The music at the High Celebration was Smart in F.

At Evensong Mr. C. H. Lloyd conducted, and Mr. G. R. Sinclair presided at the organ. Tallis's Responses were sung. The Service was Stainer in E flat, and the Anthem was "Great is the Lord" (Ouseley). After the sermon the Hallelujah Chorus ("Messiah") was sung.

In the evening a Service of Praise was held in the Cathedral, and a fine selection of music was given. During the first part of the programme Mr. Sinclair presided at the organ, and played the Barcarole from Sterndale Bennett's Fourth Concerto, and Guilmant's Sonata in D minor. During the second part of the programme Mr. Lloyd presided at the organ, and his selection included Smart's Air and Variation, with Finale Fugato, and Mozart's Fantasia in F minor. In the vocal part of the programme Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" was sung, the solo in which was taken by F. Thomas, a Truro boy.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

Coming events cast shadows before them in length proportioned to their magnitude and importance, and the penumbra of the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1888 is sufficiently definite already to afford a fairly good idea of the general shape and leading features of the Festival itself. The report of the Orchestral Committee, read at the meeting of the General Committee on the 18th ult., will relieve a good deal of apprehension by showing that, in spite of many serious disappointments owing to the illness, unwillingness, or inability of composers of note to accept commissions for next year's Festival, the managers will be able to make a good show of growing and attractive novelties, including a new Oratorio on the subject of "Judith and Holofernes," by Dr. Hubert Parry; a new romantic Cantata embodying the Greek legend of "Callirhöe," by Dr. Frederick Bridge; and a new choral work by Mr. Goring Thomas, besides, in all probability, a new Cantata by the Norseman, Grieg. Sir Arthur Sullivan's hands are too full at present to permit of his undertaking a new Festival work this time, but he will be worthily represented in the programme by his "Golden Legend," and similarly, in the absence of anything fresh from the pen of Anton Dvorák, the Festival managers propose to bring forward the Czech composer's picturesque "Stabat Mater," which has not yet been heard at a Birmingham Festival. The Requiem of Hector Berlioz and some representative work of John Sebastian Bach may also be looked for. These several works, with the indispensable "Messiah" and "Elijah," and the customary miscellaneous programme at the evening Concerts, afford assurance of a substantial music feast that may compare not unworthily with most of its recent predecessors, whilst the name of Dr. Richter, as Conductor, is a guarantee that the performance will not be unworthy of the programme.

Mr. Stockley's inaugural Concert fell too near the end of October for notice in our November issue, but the event was of sufficient musical importance to justify some reference to it even after a month's interval. Dr. Villiers Stanford's Irish Symphony, first produced at Richter's Concerts in June last, was the principal novelty, and the interest which always attaches to the hearing of a new work was enhanced by the presence of the composer, who conducted it. The Irish Symphony is too scholarly elaborate and imaginative a work to be fully comprehended at the first hearing, but the audience were evidently much impressed by its breadth and elevation of style, the richness and variety of the orchestration, and the picturesqueness of the Hibernian colouring which prevails, more particularly in the jig-like Allegro molto in D minor, and the Finale, in which apt reminiscences occur of "Brian the Brave" and "Let Erin remember." The performance was, on the whole, a very creditable one, though the heavier strings were somewhat wanting in power, and the instruments of brass and percussion were at times unduly prominent. Another item of special interest was the intermezzo from the Symphony in F of Hermann Goetz, a charming movement, of which the principal subject is given out by the horn with a delicate accompaniment by the wood-wind. The Overtures to "Anacreon," "Jessonda," and "Ruy Blas" were capitally played, and Madame Georgina Burns and Mr. Leslie Crotty, in the vocal department, furnished pleasant relief and contrast to the instrumental numbers.

The recent marked revival of public interest in the works of Hector Berlioz, whose Requiem has been selected for performance at the next Birmingham Festival, led the Festival Choral Society, on the 10th ult., to bring forward the famous Frenchman's "Damnation of Faust" at their second Concert. The work, originally produced in 1846, and first heard in this country at Her Majesty's Theatre on June 1, 1878, on the occasion of a Concert given by M. Pasdeloup, is sufficiently familiar to the London public, and there is no need therefore to expatiate upon it here. The performance was remarkably spirited and powerful, and the band in particular has never been heard to more advantage. Madame Minnie Hauk greatly delighted the audience by the charm and finish of her singing, more especially in the pathetic meeting scene between Faust and Margaret, and in the "King of Thule" ballad also she was very charming. Mr. Lloyd was suitably impassioned as the lover, and sang throughout in admirable style; and Mr. Bridson, as Mephistopheles, and Mr. Price, as Brander, also acquitted themselves very creditably, though a weightier and richer voice was certainly wanted in the music of the Tempter. Of the choral rendering of the work I must speak with more reserve. Some numbers were charmingly sung, but in others, and those some of the most dramatic, there was a frequent unsteadiness that indicated want of adequate rehearsal.

Owing to the great sensation created by young Hofmann's performances at the first of Messrs. Harrison's Concerts a few days previously, the child-pianist was brought forward a second time, at short notice, on the 2nd ult., when he gave a Recital in the Town Hall, to one of the largest and most demonstrative audiences ever attracted by a musical entertainment here. One of the most interesting features of the Concert was the improvisation introduced towards the close of the Concert, when, on the invitation of M. Casimir Hofmann, the names of eight local musicians, both amateurs and professionals, were thrown into a hat in order that one might be drawn by lot to dictate a theme for young Hofmann. The lot fell upon Mr. Stephen S. Stratton, who proposed a lyrical melody of eight bars in common time, key of A flat. Plain harmonies were added by Mr. Hofmann, sen., in trying it over, but the young improvisatore chose harmonies of his own, and then, breaking the theme up into phrases, proceeded to vary, elaborate, and develop it in the most masterly and effective manner. The closing passage was especially happy and appropriate, and was received by the audience with a perfect storm of applause.

In connection with the Conversazione of the Birmingham and Midland Musical Guild, on the 5th ult., an interesting Concert, in which most of the leading members of the Society took part, was given in the large room of the Grand Hotel. One of the principal features of the programme was a manuscript Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Mr. E. J. Breakspeare, which was played by the composer, assisted by Messrs. Abbott and Owen. The composition is thoroughly modern in style and treatment, with a Leitmotiv in the opening Allegretto which re-appears towards the close of the last movement. One of the most pleasing movements is a Barcarole-like Andantino in B flat. A Rondo theme supplies the motive of the final Allegro moderato in F. The work was enthusiastically received. Another novelty was a song by the President of the Guild, Mr. S. S. Stratton, entitled "The sun and the flower," charmingly sung by Madame Oscar Pollack.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Pollack's annual Concert, on the 23rd, when the Mayor, Mr. Maurice Pollack, supported his brother by his presence, drew a large and appreciative audience at the Masonic Hall, and appeared to give general satisfaction. Mrs. Mason, Mrs. Pollack, Mr. Gervas Cooper, and Mr. H. Partridge sang tastefully. Miss Adelina Martinengo (violinist) performed the Andante from Mendelssohn's Concerto. A new Romance for violoncello, by Mr. Troman, was skilfully and sympathetically played by Mr. J. Owen and Mr. Pollack, besides winning golden opinions by his tasteful rendering of a trio of pianoforte pieces by Chopin, Henselt, and F. E. Bache, combined with Mr. Troman in a most spirited and effective performance of Liszt's Symphonic poem "Les Préludes."

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

The full prospectus of the new season of Choral Union Concerts has been issued. It is, to my mind, a satisfactory piece of compilatory work on the part of the programme committee, who, as often as not, get more abuse than praise for their disinterested labours. Guided in some degree by economical considerations, these gentlemen have chiefly confined their selections to works which have been heard in previous seasons, but the Concerts will, I am sure, prove none the less attractive on that account. I here present an account of the principal orchestral works to be performed in course of the series, premising that the Subscription Concerts only are referred to, the arrangements for the Popular Concerts not being yet announced. There will be the following Symphonies: Beethoven, No. 5, in C minor and No. 7, in A; the Symphonie Fantastique of Berlioz; Haydn in E flat (No. 10 of the Salomon Set); Mendelssohn in A major, the "Italian"; Mozart in E flat; and Spohr's "Power of Sound" Symphony. The following four Concertos will be performed, namely: Beethoven, No. 3, in C minor, pianoforte; Dvorák, violin (first time); Mendelssohn in E minor, violin; and D. Popper in E minor, violoncello (first time). Then the Overtures are Beethoven's "Leonore," No. 3, Sterndale Bennett's "Paradise and the Peri," Berlioz's "Roman Carnival," Cherubini's "Anacreon," Mendelssohn's "Calm Sea and prosperous Voyage" and "The lovely Melusina," Schumann's "Genoveva," and Weber's "Der Freischütz." I need not detail all the miscellaneous selections, but may mention merely that two excerpts from Wagner, "Dreams," a Reverie for strings, and Introduction to the Third Act of "Lohengrin," as also the Serenade for two flutes and harp by Berlioz, Brahms's Variations on a theme by Haydn, and "The Bee's Dance," from Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba," are included for performance for the first time. The orchestra numbers about seventy-five performers; the leading violin, as mentioned last month, is this year Mr. Fernandez Arbós, and Mr. E. Gillet is principal violoncello, but there are very few changes in the general personnel of the band. The first Concert (orchestral) takes place on the 13th inst.

The first of a series of four Concerts by the Paisley Choral Union took place, on the 11th ult., in the G. A. Clark Town Hall. The part taken by the Society was comparatively an unimportant one, the Concert, indeed, being of the ballad class, with a few choral numbers interspersed. Madame Valleria was one of the principal solo singers. The chorus sang remarkably well in their selections, under the guidance of Mr. James Barr, the honorary Conductor of the Society. It is found necessary as yet, as indeed it was in the early days of the Glasgow Choral Union, to give one such Concert in order to clear expenses. The next Concert of the series is on the 16th inst., and is chiefly orchestral; the next two fall on January 13 and April 6, with Macfarren's Cantata "The Lady of the Lake" and Handel's "Samson" respectively on these dates.

The Glasgow Corporation Saturday Afternoon Concerts in the City Hall, for the working classes, began on the 6th ult. The Albert Select Choir, led by Mr. J. Lillie, sang at the first Concert, and there were several organ solos and elocutionary recitals. The subsequent Concerts during the month were of a somewhat similar nature, and all were well attended. The charges are 1d. and 3d.

The Saturday Evening Concerts in the same place, under the auspices of the Abstainers' Union, and with a similar purpose, are obtaining a fair share of attention, but there is no doubt that the two sets of entertainments clash somewhat.

Madame Adelina Patti and party had a first-rate reception on their visit to Glasgow on the 21st ult., St. Andrew's Hall being crowded in every part. It is fully twenty-five years since Madame Patti last appeared in Glasgow, but that was before she had become famous, and the circumstances have been completely forgotten. The present visit was practically, therefore, her first one to Glasgow.

We had a three weeks' course of opera in English by the Carl Rosa Opera Company at the Royalty Theatre last month. Though there have been several occasions in which the house was well filled, notably at the performance of "Don Giovanni," the engagement altogether cannot be said to have been successful. Perhaps the troupe has been found somewhat short of its usual high standard, but be the cause what it may, the fact is as stated. Mr. J. W. Turner was fortunate in having very crowded houses during the week his Opera Company appeared at the Royal Princess's Theatre last month.

A series of twelve Historical Organ Recitals is announced to be given in Kelvinside Free Church, by Mr. Herbert T. Lewis, Mus. B., Oxon., and two have already been given with highly gratifying success. The scheme is intended to illustrate chronologically the great schools of music, and the programmes include selections from the best organ music extant.

Mr. C. Hall Woolnoth, an excellent pianist here, delivered a Lecture on Wagner's Opera "Lohengrin" in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 2nd ult. He was assisted by Mrs. Shepherd in the vocal illustrations. The first of a series of four Chamber Concerts was given by Mr. W. H. Cole and party on the 10th ult. Though as yet somewhat slowly, quartet playing is, without doubt, becoming appreciated in our busy city.

At the Glasgow Society of Musicians' Meetings there have been read, during the last month, a paper by Mr. Otto Schweizer, of Edinburgh, on "The National Songs and Dances of European Countries," and by Mr. J. Seligmann, President of the Society, one entitled "Recollections of Pianoforte playing during the last sixty years." A Ladies' Afternoon Meeting was held on Saturday, the 19th ult., and was very largely attended. There was much good music on the part of members and friends.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(From our own Correspondent).

The first of Mr. Charles Hallé's series of eight Orchestral Concerts was given in the Philharmonic Hall, on Tuesday, the 1st ult., before a fashionable and critical, if somewhat sparse, audience. An excellent programme was compiled, before the performance of which a melancholy duty was gone through as a tribute to the memory of the late Sir George Macfarren, by the orchestra playing Handel's Dead March from "Saul," the audience standing throughout. The impressiveness of the deep silence which followed will not soon pass from the memory of those present on the occasion. The pièce de résistance was the D minor Symphony (No. 4), by Schumann, given for the first time at these Concerts. Madame Norman-Néruda, beside contributing Wieniawski's "Polonaise Brillante" in A major, took part with the orchestra in the performance of Beethoven's famous Violin Concerto in D (Op. 61). Madame Nordica, as the vocalist of the evening, sang an air from Mozart's "Zauberflöte," a cavatina from Pacini's "Niobe," and Délibes' bolero, entitled "Les filles de Cadiz." Great expectations were formed of this lady's share of the programme, and to say that these expectations were realised to the fullest extent is but the bare truth. The other items performed by the orchestra were the Overtures to "Oberon" and "Marco Spada," the "Tragique," by Brahms, for the first time here, and Wagner's "Introduction and Isolde's Liebestod," from "Tristan und Isolde." Mr. Hallé, of course, conducted, and met with a warm welcome.

Tuesday, the 8th ult., was what may justly be termed a red-letter day for the musical public of Liverpool, as, for the third Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society, two works were produced for the first time here, both by renowned English composers, one of whom conducted his magnificent work in person. The production of Sullivan's "Golden Legend" and Stanford's "Revenge" will long be memorable to those who were present on this occasion. The vocal principals were Mesdames Nordica and Winant, together with Messrs. Lloyd and Watkin Mills. Great praise is due to the "practical members" for their singing of the choral portions of this work, especially in the sublime evening hymn "O gladsome light" and the exquisite chorus "O pure in heart," both of which were encored, the first named having to be repeated. The band played well throughout the whole of the picturesque orchestration. Mr. Best presided at the organ. "The Revenge" was conducted by Mr. Hallé.

That little wonder, Josef Hofmann, gave two Recitals here last month, the first taking place on Saturday afternoon, the 5th ult., in the Concert-room of St. George's Hall, the usual place for afternoon Classical Recitals, which was crowded to excess. The booking being so quick and great, Messrs. Cramer and Co. at once advertised a second one for the following Saturday afternoon in the much more spacious Philharmonic Hall, which was again packed by a kindly but critical audience. The first day's programme embraced, beside two duets which the boy played with his father, Beethoven's Sonata Pathétique, a Nocturne, Mazurka, and Valse, by Chopin; and Liszt's arrangement of the Chant Polonais. For the second Concert, among a host of minor yet acceptable items, Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata and Mendelssohn's Rondo Capriccioso were down. The varied expressions of the former, and the brilliancy and vivacity of the latter, were brought out most prominently. The difficult accomplishment and test of improvising on a theme given by one of the audience was perhaps the most marvellous feat of each Concert, the themes given being respectively from Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasia and a melody by Weber. In each case the theme was most cleverly enlarged upon.

For the second Hallé Concert, held in the Philharmonic Hall on the 15th ult., the programme included Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, two Légendes for the first time, by Dvorák, Wagner's Overture to "Die Meistersinger," and Weber's popular "L'Invitation à la Valse," instrumented by Berlioz. The ever-welcome "Pastoral," with its beautiful effects, was given with all the old force which has hitherto distinguished its performance by this splendid body of players, the wind instruments being especially good. The two Légendes are in Dvorák's best strain, and were well received. A new-comer in the person of Mr. Franz Néruda appeared at this Concert as solo violoncellist, contributing a Concertstück, composed by himself, for violoncello and orchestra, and two short pieces by Popper, in which he had the able co-operation of Mr. Hallé at the piano. Mr. Néruda's tone and execution although good, are not remarkable; he received a recall and encore at the conclusion of the Popper Mazurka. Mr. Edward Lloyd was the vocalist.

Miss Richardson, one of our most popular and talented local musicians, gave her fourth annual Concert, on the 18th ult., at the Rotunda Hall in this city, before a large audience. The Concert was in every way a success.

We have had, for the first time here for many years, a short season of Italian Opera. Mr. Mapleson's company gave seven performances in the week commencing the 7th ult., at the Alexandra Theatre, before very large and appreciative audiences. The operas produced were "Il Trovatore" (twice), "Carmen," "Ernani," "Faust," "Il Flauto Magico," and "Don Giovanni." The performances were, on the whole, very good. The centenary production of "Don Giovanni" was excellent, and undoubtedly the best performance of the week. Madame Minnie Hauk and Messrs. Ravelli and Del Puente were all in fine voice, and earned the hearty and enthusiastic plaudits of those present. The band was a trifle weak, but the chorus was very satisfactory. The performances were under the able direction of the veteran Conductor, Arditi.

The fourth of the Philharmonic Subscription Concerts was given on Tuesday, the 22nd ult., the only novelty for Liverpool contained in the programme being Haydn's "Letter T" Symphony. This work, redolent of freshness and humour, with all its marvellous devices of counterpoint, was thoroughly appreciated by the audience, and splendidly played by the orchestra. Mr. Hallé was solo pianist, and besides joining the band in the rendering of Beethoven's familiar Concerto (No. 1, in G minor), played in his usual quiet but masterly style two soli—namely, Chopin's Ballade in F and a Gavotte in A, by Gluck and Brahms. Madame Marian McKenzie was the vocalist, and contributed in a finished manner "O mio Fernando," from Donizetti's "Favorita"; "Quando a te lieta," from Gounod's "Faust," and Sullivan's ballad "The willow song." One could hardly help regretting, on hearing the rich and sympathetic voice, that its possessor was about to quit the concert platform for the operatic stage. The orchestra played almost perfectly Wagner's Overture to "Tannhäuser," Mendelssohn's "Trumpet" Overture, and a "Danse Slav" in C, by Dvorák. The chorus had next to nothing to do, the ladies rendering Schumann's "Wreathe ye the steps" in the first part of the programme, and the full chorus, Mozart's "Sweet peace descending," in the second part. Mr. Hallé conducted, Mr. Straus handling the bâton for the Beethoven Concerto. For the fifth Concert, on the 6th inst., Madame Albani is engaged.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

Naturally, our first anxiety at the beginning of each musical season is to ascertain the condition of Mr. Hallé's band, to ascertain whether it maintains its old excellence, or is even further strengthened and improved. So much of our enjoyment during the winter months must depend upon the Thursday evening orchestral performances, that we look forward to the first of the twenty Concerts with hopeful earnestness, and feel delighted when the Weber Overture ("Oberon," this time) has testified to the continued excellence of the staff of instrumentalists working under the direction of our veteran Conductor. This year, beyond question, nothing but satisfaction could be felt. So far, we have listened to the Schumann D minor, the Mendelssohn "Italian," and the Schubert C major Symphonies, to the Suite in D (Op. 39), and the Légendes (Nos. 1 and 10, from Op. 59) of Dvorák, to the "Isolde's Liebestod" of Wagner, and to the second Rhapsodie of Liszt with keen enjoyment of the richness and volume of tone produced, and with full appreciation of the general excellence and vigour of the whole performance. If anything is still left to be desired, it is that the esteemed director would occasionally compel the powerful force under his sway to that delicacy of finish which has always been so attractive and conspicuous in his own solo playing, and which has already this season been exhibited in the Concerti, Nos. 1 and 2, of Beethoven, and still more clearly in the fugitive efforts of Chopin. Mr. Hallé never shows to greater advantage than in his interpretation of those graceful little fancies, the brief poetic glimpses of the Polish pianist, wherein the peculiar genius of the composer is not blemished by attempts at a larger constructive development for which he was not qualified. In addition to his own solo playing, Mr. Hallé has introduced here Master Josef Hofmann, who, at the second Concert, and also at his own Recital in the following week, excited an almost unbounded enthusiasm; and Mr. Franz Néruda, an artist of varied accomplishment, not only a violoncellist of pure tone and refined phrasing, but a writer of great skill and experience, if not a composer of striking originality. His orchestral Suite, "In the Forest of Bohemia," may have charms of relevance of style, and of national characteristics that appeal not to us; but, unquestionably, it is powerfully—if a little monotonously—scored. The vocalists at these Concerts have included Madame Nordica, Miss Hope Glenn, Mdlle. Trebelli, and Mr. and Mrs. Henschel. While admitting gratefully our indebtedness to Mr. Hallé for the excellence of his orchestral Concerts, I must refer to a feeling of disappointment caused by the announcement that the choral nights are to be reduced to six, including, at least, two works already too familiar to most musical people. The expenses of adequately producing an oratorio are admittedly heavy, and if they are not adequately met a Concert-giver could scarcely be expected to persevere in an unremunerative undertaking. Still, Mr. Hallé has now for so many years had control of our larger musical undertakings, that if we are not to be entirely deprived of opportunities of hearing the greater choral works, the risk must be his. And would it not be well—as the small attendance at the performance of the "Creation" (given so many times of late, and fairly within the grasp of smaller societies), and the decreasing attractiveness of "The Messiah" testify to the failing drawing powers of the older works—at any rate, for a season or two, to try the experiment of presenting less known oratorios? It cannot be charged against us that such novelties have failed to interest, and it is evident that Manchester people have no desire to hear the same choral works year after year. Therefore, why not boldly attempt a plan which has every argument in its favour, a very encouraging chance of success, and which must bring to its upholder a sense of having conscientiously made a praiseworthy effort, and fulfilled a duty not, perhaps, altogether easy or pleasant?

That Mr. de Jong made a mistake in introducing in the concert-room the "Royal Jubilee Exhibition band," the very limited attendance and the effect alike testified; the one by a pecuniary and the other by an artistic demonstration. It was a relief when, at his second Concert (at which Madame Nordica, Mr. Spengel, and Mr. Barrington Foote sang), the regular orchestra re-appeared and played with really admirable brilliance.

The "Gentlemen's Concerts" seem to be sinking more and more into difficulties and perplexities. That the orchestral Concerts cannot compete with the larger undertakings in the better adapted Free Trade Hall has long been evident. Still they are attempted. The most discouraging thing is that even the Pianoforte Recitals, which Mr. Hallé so generously undertakes, and the admirable Chamber Concerts sometimes given, fail to stimulate the public to take an interest in an institution now so rapidly expiring, that all the energy of a vigorous direction must be needed if anything like useful life is to be maintained.

At the Concert of the "Vocal Society," on the 23rd ult., a very pleasing new Part-song, by the Conductor, Dr. Watson, and entitled "The Soldier's Dream," was warmly welcomed, and the excellence of the efforts of the choir atoned for much that was more ambitious than finished in the solo singing.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Owing to the fact that the Royal Jubilee Exhibition remained open until the end of October, our musical season is somewhat late in commencing this year. As long as the Exhibition continued it was useless to attempt anything in the way of Concert-giving. The wants of musical amateurs have, however, by no means been neglected by the executive of the Exhibition, as music has been relied upon as the chief attraction of the show. Organ Recitals—good, bad, and indifferent—have been given twice, and frequently thrice, a day without intermission for the past six months; bands from all parts of the country have "discoursed sweet music" at all hours of the day and night; and some of our best local choirs and orchestral societies—notably, Dr. Rea's Choir, the Tynemouth Philharmonic Society, Mr. Alderson's Choir, the Northumberland Amateur Orchestral Society, Mr. Vincent's Ladies' Orchestra, and others—have given Concerts at frequent intervals. The most important musical undertaking, however, in connection with the Exhibition was a series of Chamber Music Concerts, promoted by Messrs. A. Hirschmann and Co. These Concerts, to the number of 148, were given every day the Exhibition was open. It is, therefore, impossible to give a list (which has been published in a very neat form for private circulation) of all the works performed; but to give an idea of the importance of the undertaking we may mention that it included such works as Beethoven's Grand Septet for strings and wind; quintets by Prout (Op. 3) and Schumann (Op. 44); piano quartets by Prout in F (Op. 18), Reissiger in E flat, and Rheinberger in E flat; string quartets by Beethoven and Mendelssohn, and a large number of piano trios, duets for piano and violin, &c. It is impossible to over-estimate the value of the work accomplished by Messrs. Hirschmann and Co., as they have not only been the means of introducing to musical amateurs a large number of important works of all schools, but they have also afforded opportunities for local musicians to bring themselves prominently before the public.

The first important Concert of our season took place on Wednesday, the 16th ult., and was promoted by the Chamber Music Society. The artists were Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. Franz Néruda, and Mr. Charles Hallé, with Madame Sandon as vocalist. The programme included Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in B flat (Op. 97) and Schumann's Trio in F (Op. 80), with solos for all the artists. Needless to say everything was performed in the most satisfactory and artistic manner. The Concerts of the Chamber Music Society partake more of the character of drawing-room re-unions than ordinary Concerts. The musical arrangements resemble as nearly as possible those of the "Monday Pops" at St. James's Hall, but the price of admission is necessarily high, so that the audiences are what are usually termed "select."

Our musical season does not promise to be such a busy one as those of recent years. The Hallé Orchestral Concerts are discontinued, as the undertaking is said to have been a financial failure. Dr. Rea has, however, put forward a very attractive programme, including "Lobgesang," two Orchestral Concerts by the Glasgow Choral Union Orchestra, under Mr. August Manns, of the Crystal Palace, at one of which Berlioz's "Faust" will be performed, with the assistance of Dr. Rea's choir, and Mr. Prout's new Cantata "The Red Cross Knight."

MUSIC IN THE WEST.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The Choral and Orchestral Society of Cheltenham, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Matthews, has made a great advance this year by abandoning the usual annual Concert in favour of the more ambitious scheme of a Musical Festival, arranged on the same pattern as those of the neighbouring Cathedral towns. The Mayor of the town heads a long list of subscribers and patrons. The band and chorus numbered over 300. The plan included three Concerts, to be given at the Winter Gardens, and the works selected were Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Sullivan's "Golden Legend," a Jubilee Lyric by Sir Herbert Oakeley, set to words by Lord Rosslyn, the Cantatas "God, Thou art great" (Spohr) and "Sleeping Beauty" (Cowen). "The Golden Legend" was given on October 25, and was exceedingly creditably rendered. Before long the Cheltenham Festival will probably take a position amongst provincial gatherings of the sort. There was not a vacant chair to be seen, and this, we are sure, is necessary, if the Concerts are to be a financial success, for the prices of the tickets are much lower than is customary at Festivals. The solos were entrusted to Mdlle. Nordica, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Watkin Mills, all of whom acquitted themselves in a highly praiseworthy manner. Mr. Matthews conducted with much good judgment. The miscellaneous portion of the programme included Rossini's Overture to "William Tell," played in spirited fashion by the band, followed by Sir Herbert Oakeley's Jubilee Lyric, which, conducted by the composer, was much appreciated. "The Golden Legend" was not new to the Cheltenham choir, as it was given, with great success, by Mr. Matthews at his Concert in February last, and this no doubt partly accounted for the steadiness exhibited in almost all the choral numbers.

On the second day the Winter Garden was again well filled from end to end with an appreciative audience gathered together to listen to Mendelssohn's "Elijah," given in a way superior to any yet heard in Cheltenham. The chorus and band numbered 300, and the soloists were as follows:—Mrs. Hutchinson, Miss Julia Jones (sopranos), Miss Hope Glenn (contralto), Mr. Barton McGuckin (tenor), and Mr. Watkin Mills (bass). These all acquitted themselves successfully, a word of special praise being due to Mrs. Hutchinson and to Miss Hope Glenn. The chorus did very well on the whole, though occasionally there was room for a good deal of improvement; still it was an encouraging performance, showing care and earnestness in preparation, and the credit of it is largely due to the zeal and energy of Mr. J. A. Matthews, the Conductor. The Festival was brought to a close on the same evening by a miscellaneous Concert, consisting of popular selections of various kinds, one being a Pastoral, the words of which were contributed by the Rev. Canon Bell, and the music by Mr. C. Harford Lloyd, who conducted his composition. Another interesting item was a Part-song, written by Mr. C. L. Williams, Organist of Gloucester Cathedral, which also was conducted by the composer. Another well written part-song, the composition of Miss Ellicott, entitled "Radiant sister of the day," together with a duet, "Sing to me," by the same composer, also formed a portion of the programme. At the opening of the second part of the Concert, Mr. Matthews was presented by the Festival Committee with an illuminated address, which was read to him by Sir Herbert Oakeley, thanking him for his enterprising and successful labours.

A good many Concerts have been given in Bristol during the last few weeks, but with a few honourable exceptions they have been of the ballad type, and the programmes do not call for special remark. Mr. Sims Reeves paid us a visit towards the end of October, and with a party of distinguished artists, who had previously given a Concert at Plymouth, gave great pleasure to the large audience assembled in Colston Hall. The names of Mdlle. Rosina Isidor, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Charles Chilley, Signor Foli, Madame Frickenhaus, Signor Simonetti, Signor Bottesini, and Herr Volkmer were sufficient to ensure an evening of attractive music.

Mr. Henry Dodd, of Birmingham, has organised a series of entertainments in Colston Hall, Bristol, going by the title of "Monday Popular Concerts," which are held weekly, and are announced to continue until Easter. The number of attendants varies greatly, according either to the weather or to the attractions offered. Miss Alice Gomes has twice appeared at these Concerts with marked success, but usually the party of singers varies each time, and occasionally some of our local instrumentalists take part, such as Mr. Liebich (piano) and Mr. Carrington (violin). The programmes consisted of vocal and instrumental solos of a popular type, and at present no work of magnitude has been attempted. Among the "honourable exceptions" referred to above, we must notice Miss Mary Lock's first Chamber Concert for the present season, given on October 26, when several works of interest were offered. Also the Pianoforte Recital given by the marvellous child, Josef Hofmann, on the 8th ult., which was followed the next night by the second of Mrs. Viner Pomeroy's series of Classical Chamber Concerts for this season. There was a better attendance than usual at the latter entertainment, and the works presented were Rheinberger's Quartet in E flat, for piano, violin, viola, and violoncello; Beethoven's Trio in C minor, for strings; and G. A. Macfarren's Quintet in G minor, for piano, violin, viola, violoncello, and contra-basso, which last was given for the first time, and will be repeated by desire at the third Concert on the 7th inst. There were also two solos for the contra-basso, a Larghetto of Mozart's, and Handel's air "O ruddier than the cherry," which were effectively played by Mr. John Reynolds. The other executants were Mr. Henry Holmes, first violin; Mr. Ellis Roberts, viola; Mr. J. Pomeroy, violoncello; and Mrs. Pomeroy, pianoforte

So much has been written about little Hofmann, that it seems unnecessary to say more than that he came, played, and conquered the hearts of the enthusiastic audience assembled to see and hear him. Hundreds were turned from the doors disappointed, and the wonder of those present seemed steadily to increase as the child went on with his trying programme. This was as follows: Concerto (two pianos), Weber; Sonata Pathétique, Beethoven; Nocturne, E major, Mazurka, C major, and Valse, A flat, Chopin; Romance and Valse, Josef Hofmann; Chant Polonais, Chopin-Liszt; and Polacca, for two pianos, Weber-Liszt. Add to this that the juvenile pianist improvised for a considerable time on a theme supplied by Mr. Joseph Roeckel, who was present, and it is evident that his talents are as varied as they are remarkable. He performed with the greatest apparent ease tasks which would have been hard to a matured musician, and went through the whole evening's work right merrily, never flagging in the least. His father, M. Casimir Hofmann, accompanied him, and presided at the second piano.

Organ Recitals have been given during the past month by Mr. George Riseley, at the Colston Hall, the programmes consisting of old favourites, as well as some new works of interest.

A very fair rendering of Dr. Stainer's work, "The Daughter of Jairus," was given at the church of St. Mary, Redcliffe, on the 3rd ult., the choir being augmented for the occasion and consisting of seventy voices.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Seldom or never in any one month has there been such musical activity in the populous towns of the West Riding as during the November now drawing to a close. All the leading societies, and their name is legion, have given performances, and musical evenings have been quite the rage.

Huddersfield has more especially distinguished herself by the holding of a Musical Festival in aid of the funds of the medical charities. Few towns have of late entered more heartily into the cause, and few have earned a higher reputation. Not a little of this is due to the fine performances of the Choral Society, between whom and one of our foremost composers there has latterly sprung up mutual confidence and esteem such as have had important results. With the assistance of the Choral Society, Mr. Prout, as stated in our last issue, was enabled during October to produce with more than usual éclat his new dramatic Cantata "The Red Cross Knight," a work which has made a favourable impression on musicians, and one which, like its predecessor "Hereward," may safely be expected to secure the favour of choral institutions. Besides the Choral Society there are other kindred organisations of conspicuous merit in the town, and from these combined forces the promoters of the Musical Festival held on the 2nd ult. were enabled to make an admirable selection without seeking assistance from outside. The Festival was not rich in novelties, the only approach to anything of the kind being Sir Herbert Oakeley's setting of the Earl of Rosslyn's poem "Love that lasts for ever," and which, as a "Jubilee lyric," took the place of the National Anthem, Sir Herbert, as Conductor and composer, being cordially received. But though there were no new works, the morning Concert was of exceptional interest, even to serious musicians, many of whom travelled from a considerable distance to be present, on account of the production of "The Golden Legend" and "The Revenge." Both works were handsomely treated by the Huddersfield chorus, and the works had a fine hearing. The orchestral portions were especially well handled by Mr. Hallé's men, and of the chorus it may truly be said that in respect of quality of tone and balance, better singing was never heard. The solos were in the hands of Madame Albani, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Dr. Stanford conducted his own work, which was given with remarkable vigour and spirit by all concerned. Mr. Hallé conducted Sir Arthur Sullivan's work. The name of the chorus-master, Mr. John North, who discharged his share of the work with the utmost efficiency, should not be omitted. At the evening Concert Mr. Hallé's band provided the chief portion of the fare, the only other contributions being songs by Madame Albani, an organ solo by Mr. Walter Parratt, and two piano solos by Mr. Hallé. The Leonora and Scotch Symphonies, with the Overture and Introduction to the third Act of "Lohengrin," Svendsen's Norwegian Rhapsody, and a selection from Berlioz's "Faust" were given with their accustomed brilliancy by the band. Mr. Parratt, who was formerly connected with Huddersfield, had a fine reception. The Festival probably did not realise all that was expected of it, but the promoters, among whom was Mr. John Watkinson, of Farfield, have every reason to be proud of the success which attended their efforts.

A new work by the Organist of the Leeds Parish Church, Dr. Creser, was produced by the Armley and District Choral Society, on the 15th ult. This, a Mass in C, is not Dr. Creser's first contribution to music, his Cantata "Eudora" being fairly well known among musicians; but it is decidedly in advance of anything he has previously attempted, and will considerably enhance his reputation as a composer who possesses both technical knowledge and intellectual gifts of a commendable quality. He has aimed high, and the product of his effort, while embodying a natural gift of melody devoid of anything like feebleness, is scientific without being pedantic. Excellent use is made of the orchestra, the score being laid out for a full band, and the combinations are occasionally remarkably effective. There is also abundance of scope for the chorus and for solo voices. The solos, on the occasion of the first production of the work, were rendered by Madame Clark, Miss Walton, Messrs. W. H. Harrison and A. Crossfield. The band, which consisted largely of amateurs, was led by Mr. Charles Dyson, and Dr. Creser himself conducted the performance, which was well received.

Several Concerts have been provided during the month by that ubiquitous combination, Mr. Hallé's band One of the most important engagements in which they took part has been referred to. Among others was the Concert of the Bradford Subscription Concerts Committee, on the 18th ult., when two important works were produced—namely, Schubert's Grand Symphony in C, No. 9, and the Introduction and closing scene from "Tristan und Isolde." These were not the only works of interest to musicians heard on the occasion, but the former especially was one which few among the audience would have willingly missed. Berlioz was also represented by an Overture, and Liszt by one of the Hungarian Rhapsody family. Mr. Hallé rarely omits one or the other of these names from his programme, and if it were not for the splendid manner in which he produces their compositions, one might grow weary of them. Along with selections from these and other composers, the band gave Beethoven's Seventh Symphony at the first of a series of Subscription Concerts, auspiciously entered upon by Mr. Sykes, of Halifax. The Drill Hall at Halifax is scarcely the kind of place in which to put Mr. Hallé's band, but it is, perhaps, the only hall in that town sufficiently large to accommodate an audience such as assembled. It should be added that on the occasion of the Bradford Concert Madame Nordica was the vocalist, while at Halifax Miss Adelaide Mullen and Mr. H. Beaumont gave songs. At Mr. Sykes's next Concert, Dr. Stanford and the Heckmann Quartet are to provide the musical fare.

It is a matter of extreme regret to many musicians in Bradford, that owing to the feeble encouragement which has been given to Mr. Sewell's venture, he has been obliged to seriously consider the abandonment of a number of Concerts which, at the beginning of the season, he had in contemplation. Reference has frequently been made in these columns to the admirable performances which he has given at absurdly low prices. Another failure is to be recorded of his Concert of the 7th ult., when a fine programme of orchestral music was gone through. Among other things presented was Dr. Stanford's "Irish" Symphony, the characteristic flavour and ingenious development of which was very much appreciated. Dr. Stanford was down to conduct this, and his popular choral work "The Revenge." The performance of the latter was much behind that given at Huddersfield on the occasion of the Festival from a vocal point of view. Berlioz's "Messe des Morts" was repeated by Mr. Sewell on the 14th ult., to a scanty audience. The work, as on the previous occasion, was given with full band and chorus, and was very effective. Mr. Blagbro' sang the tenor solo.

At Mr. Ford's third Concert, on the 16th ult., Signor Bottesini and his big double-bass were the chief attractions, and the clever artist received such a warm reception as might have assured him that he need go no farther than Yorkshire to find friends and admirers. Madame Frickenhaus and Signor Simonetti shared his honours at this, and at one of the Huddersfield Subscription Concerts given on the previous evening at Huddersfield. On this occasion also, Mdlle. Rosina Isidor, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Charles Chilley, Signor Foli, and Mr. Farley Sinkins appeared as vocalists.

Among other Concerts, mention of which should not be omitted, was that of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, on the 11th ult., at which a novel programme was given illustrative of the English part-song from the earliest known specimen down to the present time. Dr. J. C. Bridge, the Society's Conductor, who is understood to have suggested the nature of the programme, directed its carrying out with his well-known skill.

MUSIC IN SOUTH WALES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Concert of the Cardiff Orchestral Society, with Mr. Sydney Fifoot as Conductor, was a decided success. It was held on the 2nd ult. at the Park Hall. The vocalists were Madame Georgina Burns and Mr. James Sauvage.

The second of a series of Classical Concerts, in connection with the University College at Cardiff, was given at the Lesser Park Hall, Cardiff, on the 16th ult. The audience was large, and the performances met with gratifying appreciation. Mr. Templeton, the Professor of Music, gave some pianoforte solos. The first violin was Herr Peiniger; second violin, Mr. Percy Ould; viola, Mr. Ellis Roberts; and violoncello, Mr. Charles Ould. It is regretted that Mr. Templeton is about to leave Cardiff.

The Tredegar Choral Union have won golden opinions by their performances on the 10th ult., at the Temperance Hall, of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Spohr's "Last Judgment." The soloists were Miss Julia Jones (soprano), London; Miss Polly Jenkins, a young contralto from Swansea; Mr. Fredericks (tenor), Lichfield, who replaced Mr. Castings, of Hereford; and Mr. Montague Worlock (bass), Bristol. A select orchestral party from Cardiff (Cardiff Orchestral Society), led by Mr. E. T. Roberts, rendered very creditable service. Accompanist, Mr. J. Jones.

The opening Concert of a series of Popular Concerts at Neath took place on the 13th ult. Vocalists: Miss Ellen Flynn, Miss Polly Jenkins, Eos Wenallt, and Mr. P. Brennan. At Neath, the Town Band Concert was successfully held on the 10th ult., at the Town Hall. The vocalists who assisted were Miss Lucy Clarke, Miss S. A. Evans, R.A.M., Mr. H. Morgan, and Mr. Lewis Arnold (tenors), and Mr. J. D. Smith (bass). Mr. J. S. Church played the accompaniments.

It is stated—and the announcement is received with very much regret—that the losses incurred by the Eisteddfod at the Albert Hall are above £500. We may add that some astonishment is felt that the London Eisteddfod Committee has apparently taken no steps to publish the various adjudications.

An Eisteddfod was held at Merthyr Vale on October 31, with the object of raising a fund for the relief of the local poor. The Conductor Derwenog, presided, in the absence of Mr. Bell. Eos Morlais was the Musical Conductor. The arrangements were not perfect, a feature partly attributable to the limited size of the room in which the affair was held. Mr. R. Howells (Aberdare) was the accompanist. In the bass solo competition, "Why do the nations," Mr. J. Sandbrook (Dowlais) was successful. The baritone solo, "Y bachgen dewr," was sung by several competitors, and the prize was awarded to Mr. J. John (Pontypridd). A prize of £5 was offered for the best rendering by brass bands of the "Heavens are telling," but not a single band entered for competition. Eight young ladies sang "The better land," and Miss James (Pontypridd), the last competitor, was the prize-winner. "The little Church" was the test piece for the male voice part competition. A Dowlais party, led by Mr. Dan Schofield, took the prize of £5. The prize, two guineas, for Trio singing ("On Thee each living soul awaits"), was taken by Mr. J. Broad's party from Treorky. The chief choral contest, for £20 and a gold medal for the Conductor, was interesting. The test piece was "Yr Haf" (Gwilym Gwent), and the voices were above sixty in each case. Four choirs competed: Dowlais (Mr. Hughes, leader), Merthyr Vale, Mr. Hughes; Treherbert, Mr. Noah Williams; Mountain Ash, Mr. D. E. Coleman. The first-named choir was successful.

An Eisteddfod was held at Pembroke Dock at the end of October. Mr. Lewis Morris, author of "Epic of Hades," presided at the afternoon meeting. The Neyland Choral Union took the prize of £5 offered for the best rendering by choirs of between forty and sixty voices of "The Dawn of Day" (Conductor, J. Rees). The Musical Adjudicators were: Mr. J. B Williams, Narberth; Mr. T. Kenfig Evans, Swansea; Mr. J. B. Phillips, Swansea.

Mr. Dodd's Cardiff Concerts have been continued at the Park Hall, but the "Saturday Pops," as they are locally termed, have not always been as well attended as might have been expected, notwithstanding the provision of a series of attractive programmes. The movement, however, has apparently been placed upon a permanent basis.

An interesting musical meeting of the Cardiff Band of Hope Union took place on the 16th ult., at the Park Hall, under the presidency of Mr. Alfred Thomas, M.P. A juvenile choir of about 500 voices sang several admirable pieces. Six additional societies have recently joined the Union. Special attention has lately been given to the cultivation of juvenile voices at Dowlais. A "Cymanfa" was held on the 6th ult., under the auspices of the Welsh Independents. A number of characteristic Welsh hymns were sung.

The members of the aptist Musical Union in the Merthyr district have been very active during the month, and rehearsals have been held at Merthyr and Troedyrhiw. A "Cymanfa" followed at Merthyr. Mr. Dan Davies, whose name is so closely connected with the victories of Dowlais choirs, is the leader of the united choirs. The Chairman of the last Baptist Union rehearsal at Ebenezer, Merthyr, was Mr. Francis. The vocalists numbered 700, and Miss S. A. Rowbotham played the accompaniments remarkably well. At a Baptist Musical Festival lately held in Pembrokeshire, Mr. Dan Davies, of Dowlais, was Conductor. He is giving, it appears, his chief attention at the present time to the development of congregational singing and the production of oratorios.

The annual Concert of the Severn Road Board School, at the Park Hall, Cardiff, on the 23rd ult., was very successful.

An excellent Concert was given in the recently restored Workmen's Hall, Mountain Ash. The object of the Concert was to aid a Lodge of Oddfellows. Among those present were the Hon. Misses Bruce and Lady Mary Gore.

At Ebbw Vale, on the 14th ult., the Cantata "The Coming of Emmanuel" was performed by the Caersalem Choir (Mr. Lewis Lloyd, Conductor). The orchestra was furnished by the Beaufort String Band, led by Mr. H. Chapman. The leading vocalists were Miss Elizabeth Aubrey, Miss Perry, Miss Watkins, Mr. D. Jones, and Mr. J. Davies. Madame North-Harris was the accompanist.

On the 9th ult. a vocal and instrumental Concert—one of a series—took place in Andrew's Hall, Penarth. Miss Lottie West, R.A.M., assisted. The solo instrumentalists were Mr. Frank Lambert (clarinet), Mr. Muskett, jun. (pianoforte), Sergeant Lewis (piccolo). The Conductor was Mr. Paul Draper, and the accompanist, Mr. J. Deacon.

Penrhin Choir won the prize of £20 at Pontmoel Eisteddfod, for their singing of "Jerusalem, my glorious home." The adjudicator was Mr. J. T. Williams, of Cardiff.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, November 12.

WAGNER'S "Siegfried" is the sensation of the hour. It had its first American representation at the Metropolitan Opera House on the 9th inst., and this evening the newly organised Wagner Society will celebrate the event at its first artistic meeting. The musical critic of The Tribune newspaper is to speak on the subject, and Herr Anton Seidl, the Conductor, is to illustrate points in the address at the pianoforte. Then there is to be a performance of the "Siegfried Idyl" as it was first composed by Wagner, and played by a band of twenty-one instruments, just as was done on the historic occasion in Bayreuth, when the musicians were perched on the stairs leading up to Frau Cosima's room. The representative of Wagner's impetuous young hero is Herr Max Alvary. In stature he does not correspond with the ideal, but he sings and acts the part with rare energy and understanding, and his appearance and bearing all but make up the deficiency. Herr Alvary is a son of the painter, Andreas Achevibach, and the art instinct is strong in him. He is careful in dress, and his poses and gestures are all directed to a heightening of the picturesque elements in which the drama abounds. Lilli Lehmann is the Brünnhilde, Herr Emil Fischer a delightfully musical Wotan, Herr Ferenczy a good Mime, Herr von Milde a tuneful Alberich, strange as that may sound; and Fräulein Brandt an Erda, who struggles bravely to make her hearers resigned to the opening scene of the third act, which is a trial to the patience even of the majority of Wagner's disciples. What will be the fate of the drama it is yet too early to predict. But the first reception of the work deserves to be set down as hearty, notwithstanding that the audience had to accept Wagner's drafts from the paraphernalia of the Christmas pantomime for three hours and a half, in place of the music of woman's voice and the charm of woman's presence. The drama was brought forward with an expedition that startled the singers accustomed to the easy ways of German theatres. It was the fifth work since the opening of the season on the 2nd inst., the preceding performances having been devoted to "Tristan und Isolde," "Die Meistersinger," "Fidelio," and "Tannhäuser."

The other operatic novelty to which New York has been treated is of a widely different character. Stephenson and Cellier's "Dorothy," a "comedy opera" as the bills call it, was brought forward on the 5th inst. at the Standard Theatre. Mr. Paulton's grotesque humour was heartily appreciated, and in his first efforts to amuse an American audience he was encouraged by the applause of Mr. Irving and Miss Terry, who occupied a proscenium box.

The record of the Concert-room since the season began shows fine successes for Mr. Thomas's orchestra, and a rather deplorable failure of the first European importation. Signorina Teresina Tua had the honour of opening the season on October 17. She had been incautiously advertised, and the critics and public found such a discrepancy between the expectations aroused by the announcement of her manager and her mediocre musical skill, that frank expressions of disappointment were heard on all hands, and her "business" soon ran down to an unprofitable level. Unless appearances are deceptive, Signor Campanini's Concert enterprise is threatened with a similar fate, notwithstanding that his troupe is an excellent one. Time was when such a galaxy of popular "stars" as Scalchi, Galassi, Nannetti, and Campanini would have been hailed here with gladness; but if the old Italian operas have lost their attractive power in the theatres, it is scarcely to be expected that detached airs from them will restore the charm. The once popular tenor has long had the managerial bee buzzing in his bonnet, and would never have rested easy had he not made the experiment. Such a beginning as he made on the evening of the 10th inst., however, is not likely to improve his prospects. Signora Repetto was indisposed, and thus the series began with a failure of the only singer touching whom there was any curiosity to appear. Haply Signor Campanini may do well in the far West.

M. Camille Gurickx, a Belgian pianist, created an exceedingly favourable impression at his first American appearance in a Concert of the Symphony Society; and at Mr. Thomas's first Symphony Concert, in Steinway Hall, Rafael Joseffy carried the cognoscenti off their feet by a superb performance of Tausig's arrangement of Chopin's Concerto in E minor, which D'Albert has by this time introduced to the Berlin public. Mr. John Spencer Curwen, of Tonic Sol-fa fame, is here, and will soon be honoured at a public reception. The Newark (New Jersey) Harmonic Society will perform Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia" on May 31.

Mr. Barton McGuckin made his American début in Philadelphia in "Lohengrin," in connection with the National Opera Company, with the most complete success. There was an enormous audience, who not only applauded him in the course of the work, but recalled him again and again with cheers at the conclusion. The press is unanimous in the expression of unqualified praise of the whole performance. Mr. McGuckin's Faust has also won golden opinions.

OBITUARY.

MANY of the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES, especially those of the Eastern Counties, will have noticed with regret the announcement of the death of the late Mr. John T. Frye, of Saffron Walden, on October 26.

Born in 1812, Mr. Frye, at a very early age, exhibited signs of musical talent, and at the age of eight years was appointed, after competition, organist of the Parish Church of Saffron Walden. After four years, his father, an amateur musician of considerable ability, placed him under the instruction of Mr. Nightingale, organist of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, and afterwards of the Foundling Hospital. Mr. Frye subsequently joined the late Mr. John Hullah's classes for teachers of singing. For some years he continued his studies, and became an excellent performer on all the stringed instruments of the orchestra as well as on the pianoforte and organ. At the age of twenty-seven he married the daughter of the Vicar of Saffron Walden, and, from that time, became foremost in every musical undertaking in the neighbourhood. In 1884 he resigned his appointment as organist, after a tenure of office of sixty-four years—a period which is, perhaps, unprecedented. One of Mr. Frye's pupils was his nephew, Mr. W. Frye Parker, the well-known violinist. He was conductor of several musical societies and an instructive and interesting lecturer. He took an active part in municipal matters, and was Borough Treasurer for thirty-seven years. His commanding stature and fine presence made him noticeable wherever he went, and his genial manners and kindly heart endeared him to all, while his profound knowledge and varied experience were at the disposal of each and every one who sought his advice and instruction.

ON the last day of October, Gustav Massol, once a famous singer, died in Paris at the age of eighty-five. He had appeared in England during Mr. Lumley's management in the parts of De Nevers in the "Huguenots" and Lorenzo in "Masaniello," parts he had created in the original representations. He took his farewell benefit at the Opera House in the Rue Lepelletier, and the occasion was made memorable by the attempt of Orsini on the life of the Emperor Napoleon III.

COMMUNICATIONS for the January number of THE MUSICAL TIMES should reach the Office not later than December 24, as in consequence of the Christmas Holidays it will be necessary to go to Press considerably earlier than usual.

At the second of the series of Novello's Oratorio Concerts at St. James's Hall, which takes place this evening, Mr. F. H. Cowen's Oratorio "Ruth," written for the Worcester Festival in the autumn, is to be performed for the first time in London. The composer, having happily recovered from his illness, will conduct the Oratorio, and Madame Albani, Miss Agnes Larkcom, Miss Hope Glenn, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr Watkins Mills will sing the principal parts. The picturesque dramatic treatment of the work will probably be even more highly appreciated in London than it was at Worcester. It is certainly one of the best, if not the best, of the many worthy efforts of one who has earned the right to be classed among the most distinguished of our English musicians. At the following Concert, on the 15th inst., an equally interesting and attractive programme is offered. Barnett's "Ancient Mariner," followed by Stanford's "Irish" Symphony, each work conducted by its composer, and Mendelssohn's 114th Psalm, "When Israel out of Egypt came," conducted by Mr. Randegger, will give ample opportunities for both the choral and orchestral forces, and offer an amount of variety which is most likely to be gratifying.

The Highbury Philharmonic Society inaugurated its season on the 21st ult. with a performance of "The Golden Legend," preceded in the programme by Mr. W. G. Cusins' Jubilee Cantata "Grant the Queen a long life." In spite of the disagreeable weather there was a crowded attendance. The new Conductor, Mr. Gilbert H. Betjemann, who succeeds Dr. J. F. Bridge, had a cordial reception on taking his place, and we may fairly congratulate him on the success that marked the initial results produced under his guidance. The choir, a capital body of voices, exhibited a firm attack, purity and steadiness of intonation, and notable regard for nuances. Their singing in Mr. Cusins' Cantata called forth the unstinted eulogies of the composer, who was present, and had, by the way, to respond to a hearty demonstration at the conclusion of his graceful work. In the "Legend," which from first to last went exceedingly well, the choruses were again admirably given. The unaccompanied Evening Hymn, "O gladsome Light," was redemanded, and even at the end of the encore the pitch had not fallen in the slightest degree. The original bells were used and played by Mr. G. Betjemann, junr., who also officiated at the organ. The band, numbering nearly seventy players, acquitted itself very satisfactorily. Miss Annie Marriott, Miss Marguerite Hall, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Bridson were the soloists. All entered into their tasks with the utmost spirit, while Miss Hall made a distinct success with the music of Ursula. Mr. Betjemann conducted throughout with great tact and discretion.

In England we have lost touch with the ancient practice of celebrating the feast of St. Cecilia (November 22) by some special musical performance. "They order these matters much better in France." At the Church of St. Eustache, Paris, the Feast was observed with the usual pomp. Gounod's new Mass, composed in honour of Joan of Arc, was then given for the first time in the Gallic metropolis. The choristers and orchestra were ranged near the organ in the transept, and M. Gounod conducted in person. The "Vision of Joan of Arc" was played by M. Sivori, the violinist, to the accompaniment of the organ. The congregation seemed to have treated the event after the manner of a Concert rather than as a religious ceremony. "Many of the persons who filled the nave of the spacious Church went there as they would have gone to the Opera or to a Sunday Concert, and instead of poring over the 'Ordinary of the Mass' as set forth in their daintily-bound prayer-books, they flirted and giggled and gossiped." We order these matters more decently in England.

The first Concert of the ninth season given by the Finsbury Choral Association drew a numerous and appreciative assemblage to the Holloway Hall, on the 24th ult. Gade's "Crusaders" and Barnby's "Rebekah" were the works performed, and as they were given without the assistance of an orchestra, a few words of notice will suffice. The choir, capable of relying with confidence on its own resources, sang with vigour and precision, and, when necessary, with delicacy and refinement. The tone of the voices was bright and well balanced. Miss Edith Marriott, Mr. Percy Palmer, and Mr. Robert Hilton undertook the solos in the "Crusaders," and Miss Bertha Moore replaced Miss Marriott in Barnby's work All these artists acquitted themselves with credit. Mr. Palmer did particularly well in both instances, but Mr. Hilton was heard to better advantage in "Rebekah," the part of Peter the Hermit being rather too high for him. The accompaniments were played on a piano and Mustel organ, aided by two trumpets. Mr. C. J. Dale conducted.

The appearances of Madame Adelina Patti in the Metropolis are worthy of record, if only because they have become so few and far between. Otherwise the Concert at the Albert Hall, on the 16th ult., would deserve no notice in this place. It may be the irony of fate that compels the most gifted vocalist of the age to be mainly associated with enterprises of no artistic value. There was not even an orchestra to bestow an element of dignity to the occasion mentioned above, and the programme was that of a second-rate ballad Concert, the only redeeming feature being the admirable glee singing of the London Vocal Union, under Mr. R. de Lacy, in the absence of Mr. Frederick Walker. Madame Patti was in superb voice, notwithstanding the dense fog which filled the hall, and her perfect singing lent a charm even to the hackneyed and commonplace selections with which, as usual, she contented herself. Among the artists who took part in the Concert were Madame Trebelli, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley.

Miss Mathilde Wurm, a sister we believe of Miss Marie Wurm, who obtained the Mendelssohn Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, gave a Pianoforte Recital at the Princes' Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 1st ult. The young artist, who has appeared once or twice at the Popular Concerts, is, or was, a pupil of Madame Schumann, and has gained something of the manner of her distinguished instructress. She displayed excellent technical ability in Schumann's pleasing little sketches "Les Papillons," Beethoven's Thirty-two Variations in C minor, and smaller pieces, her only defect being a certain hardness of touch, which, perhaps, would not be apparent in a larger room. Miss Wurm had the valuable co-operation of Signor Piatti, who, besides playing solos, joined her in Rubinstein's Sonata in D, for piano and violoncello. Madame Sophie Löwe, who is now seldom heard in public, sang airs by Brahms and Massenet in the artistic style which used to make her a favourite vocalist at high class concerts.

An influential and representative Committee of Musicians throughout the kingdom has been formed in order to found a Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music in memory of the late Sir G. A. Macfarren, who was Principal of that Institution from 1875 until his death. The scheme is particularly appropriate in view of the affectionate and solicitous interest which the deceased musician ever took in our oldest School of Music, and we trust that a goodly sum of money may be forthcoming, so that something more may be provided than the bare cost of education. To this end, all who desire to testify their regard for the memory of one who commanded universal esteem, should intimate at once their intention to subscribe. The Hon. Treasurer is Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, and the Hon. Secretaries are Mr. Charles E. Stephens and Mr. J. Percy Baker. Communications should be addressed to Mr. Baker, Willersley House, Wellington Road, Old Charlton, S.E.

The Wycliffe Chapel Choir and Mr. George Merritt's Choral Society gave a performance of the pieces which gained them the prize at the Musical Competitions held at the People's Palace, in July last, to a large and enthusiastic audience in the Chapel, Philpot Street, E., on the 3rd ult., under the direction of the Conductor and Choirmaster, Mr. George Merritt. The instrumental solos included a violin performance by Madame Dunbar Perkins of Wieniawski's Légende, a Cavatina by Raff, and Saltarella by Papini, for which she was recalled. Miss Marian Bonallack presided at the pianoforte and gave a Rondino and Capriccio by Sterndale Bennett in excellent style. Mr. F. A. Jewson, F.C.O., played the organ accompaniments throughout, and gave as his solos Beethoven's Grand March from the "Ruins of Athens" and a selection from Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise."

The Westminster Orchestral Society, though among the more recent establishments for the cultivation of high-class music, may be heartily congratulated upon the success which has attended its efforts. The Society is chiefly composed of amateurs, brought together and encouraged in their operations and enterprise by the famous firm of John Broadwood and Sons. Many of the students of the Royal Academy of Music have from time to time joined its ranks—its Conductor, Mr. C. S. Macpherson, having been one of the most distinguished students of his year. The works selected are cosmopolitan in character. According to the latest published report, the Society is in a flourishing condition. It has done good work in the past, has good hope in the future, and so may stand as a model for others to copy and to equal if possible.

The bazaar in aid of the funds for the renovation of Marylebone Church, which was held at the Portman Rooms, Baker Street, from the 22nd to the 26th ult., was marked by many distinguishing features. The rooms were made into the "counterfeit presentment" of the old Marybone Gardens 100 years back, and many musical and dramatic entertainments were provided for the delectation of the visitors. The most noteworthy of all was that arranged by Mr. W. A. Barrett on the 25th, a Concert of "Old fashioned musick," wherein pieces by Arne, Leveridge, Purcell, Carey, Humphries, Mozart, Webbe, Stafford Smith, Dibdin, and others were performed to the accompaniment of viols, the viola da gamba, harpsichord, &c., with the most pleasing effect. The liveliest interest was shown in the old music.

A Concert was given at St. Thomas's Rooms, Godolphin Road, Shepherd's Bush, on Tuesday, the 15th ult. Miss Annie Allan sang some songs by Cowen and Marzials; Miss Ilma Waldene some by Cowen and Niel Gow; and Madame Minnie Gwynne ballads by Marzials, Löhr, and Douglas Reed. Mr. Gabriel Thorp was the only gentleman vocalist, and acquitted himself in a very satisfactory manner. Mrs. Albert Barker also gave two recitations, "The Newsboy's debt" and "The Owl critic." Miss Clara Titterton performed compositions by Papini and Bazzini on the violin, which were marked by brilliancy of execution and great expression. Messrs. T. B. Dowling and Stanley Attwood conducted the Concert, the first-named gentleman also contributing two piano solos.

The second series of Choral Services at the Lewisham Congregational Church was commenced on Sunday, October 23, after the evening service. Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" was given. Soloists: Miss Pate, Miss Mary Hutton, Mr. Ormond Yearsley, and Mr. Arthur Brown. Miss Hutton also sang "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out," from "The Woman of Samaria." At the second service, on Sunday, the 20th ult., the music consisted of Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," solo by Miss Ambler; Goss's "O taste and see," by the choir; "O God have mercy" (St. Paul), Mr. W. H. Brereton, who also, with Miss Ambler, Miss Jessie Pate, and Mr. H. T. Gill, gave the quartet "God is a Spirit." The Organist was Mr. H. A. Hurdle, and Mr. Arthur E. Brown the Choirmaster.

The Inaugural Concert of the St. Stephen's (Canonbury) Musical and Literary Society was held on the 10th ult. in the Schools, River Street, N. The solo artists were Miss Brenda Sutherland, the Misses Ashton, and Mr. Ernest A. Tietkens. Herr Francesco Berger and Herr Jacoby contributed two solos each on the pianoforte and violin respectively, as well as Beethoven's Duo Sonata in F (Op. 24). Mr. Ernest Paxon gave two recitations during the evening. The choir sang with good effect, under the conductorship of Mr. O. E. F. Cobb, Gaul's "The Singers" and Smart's "Good night, thou glorious sun," at the end of each part. Mr. W. J. Collins, deputy Organist, in addition to a pianoforte solo, assisted as accompanist.

A Concert was given at the City of London School, Victoria Embankment, by students of the Guildhall School of Music, on the 16th ult. The Concert began with the first movement of Rubinstein's Quartet, given by Mr. J. W. Speaight, Miss G. Werge, Miss E. Werge, and Mr. Arthur Hooper. The violin solo, Fantasia Appassionata (Vieuxtemps), was given by Miss Charlotte Wilkes (Corporation Exhibitioner), who was much applauded. Another Corporation Exhibitioner, Miss Adela Duckham, gave a violin solo, "Zigeunerweisen" (Sarasate), effectively. The other students taking part were the Misses Emmie Lane, A. Tyrrell, B. White, R. Dafforne, F. Russell, A. Noon, C. Goodwin, Briggs, and A. Patrick, and Messrs. B. Jones, W. Jones, Branscombe, Weaver, and Davies.

Mr. B. M. Carrodus and Mr. H. C. Tonking gave a Violin and Organ Recital at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on Tuesday, the 8th ult. The programme opened with Chopin's Funeral March, played in memory of the late Sir G. A. Macfarren; then followed Andante and Rondo for Organ and Violin, by G. A. Macfarren, just published, and only a week before Sir George had signified his intention to be present to hear his work. Mr. Tonking's other organ solos were Toccata and Fugue in D minor (J. S. Bach), and Jubilant March, by Dr. Stainer. Mr. Carrodus's solos were Mélodie Réligieuse, by Berthold Tours, and Wieniawski's Légende. The accompaniments were cleverly managed on the organ by Mr. Tonking, especially in the piece by Tours.

For a long period the Royal Society of Musicians offered its subscribers an annual performance of "The Messiah," but of late it has varied its proceedings, and this year the compliment took the form of a performance of "Elijah," which took place at St. James's Hall, on Saturday, the 12th ult., in presence of a crowded audience. By securing Mr. Santley for the part of the Prophet, the Society did much towards assuring the success of the evening. The great artist was in fine voice, and has never rendered the music with more intense earnestness. The other principal solo parts were safe in the hands of Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Mr. H. Piercy, and there was an excellent choir and orchestra under the direction of Mr. W. H. Cummings.

Miss Louise Allan gave a most successful Concert at the Highbury Athenæum, Highbury New Park, N., on Tuesday evening, the 15th ult., assisted by the following eminent artists:—Miss Ambler, Miss Helen d'Alton, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. W. H. Brereton. Solo violin, Miss Anna Lang; soli pianoforte, Miss Louise Allan and Mr. W. Stevenson Hoyte. Mr. Stedman's choir of boys and girls from Covent Garden (in picturesque costumes by Miss Fisher) charmed the audience by their performance of the new vocal waltz, "Gypsies," "English Beauties," "See-saw," &c., and other selections. The youthful Concert-giver had an enthusiastic reception. Mr. Fountain Meen and Mr. Augustus Toop accompanied.

Mr. G. Augustus Holmes, Organist of St. George's, Camberwell, gave an Organ Recital in that church on the 13th ult. The programme, consisting of selections from Wallis, Salomé, Sullivan, Guilmant, Holmes, and Smart, was effectively rendered. Vocal music was given by Miss Marion Holmes, who sang "With verdure clad" and "Sion" (P. Rodney) with excellent taste. On the 17th ult. Mr. Holmes gave an Organ Recital at Mansion House Chapel, Camberwell. Included in the programme was "The Colonial and Indian March" (Holmes), Andante, varied (Calkin), March on a theme by Handel (Guilmant), Andante in G (Batiste), Cantilène and Grand Chœur (Salomé), and Festal March (Smart).

On October 30, the following programme was given at All Saints', Kensington Park, after evening service, as the first of a series of musical evenings for the people, under the direction of Mr. Ernest Lake, Organist and Musical Director of All Saints'. The vocalists were Miss Norah Phyllis and Mr. Vincent; Mr. Basil Althaus (solo violin). Organ Solo, "Hear my prayer" (Mendelssohn); Aria, "Lord God of Abraham" (Mendelssohn); Aria, "He shall feed His flock" (Handel); Solo Andante (Violin Concerto), Mendelssohn; Aria, "My heart ever faithful," Bach (violin obbligato, Mr. Turner); Aria, "For the mountains" (Mendelssohn); Organ Solo, Voluntary in C (Stanley). The series will be continued monthly.

On the 16th ult., at Queen's Gate Hall, South Kensington, Miss Annie Wilson gave the first of a series of Matinées Musicales. In spite of the inclement weather, the Concert was a success. The artists were Miss Annie Wilson, Miss Fitch, Miss Amy Hornimann, Miss Randegger, and Miss Minnie Hornimann; Messrs. Page and Bucalossi, jun.

The Marquis de Leuville gave two amusing and original sketches, and Miss Annie Wilson delighted the audience with her recitations. Some slight alterations were made in the programme, owing to the indisposition of two of the announced artists, but the vacancies were ably filled by the Misses Hornimann and Mr. Adams Davy.

The 189th Monthly Concert of the Grosvenor Choral Society was held at the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace Road, on Friday evening, the 18th ult., when Goring Thomas's Cantata "The Sun Worshippers," solos by Miss Lillian Gray and Mr. James Gawthrop, was most satisfactorily performed, the other part of the programme being made up of a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Miss Mackay Robinson, Miss Lillian Gray, Mr. Donnell Balfe, Mr. James Gawthrop, Mr. S. G. Millen, and Mr. H. Roach. Mrs. T. P. Frame and Miss Hartley presided at the piano, and Mr. David Woodhouse conducted.

The first Concert for this season of the Aubert Orchestral Society was given on the 21st ult., in the Lecture Hall of Highbury Hill Chapel. The orchestra, under the very able conductorship of Mr. Harold Wall, performed several pieces. Two songs were sung by Mr. Annison; Herr Curt Schulz gave some zither solos, and a duet with Dr. E. W. Alabone on the "Philomèle"; Miss H. Omarey's singing was warmly appreciated; Miss Mary L. Gerrans, by her performance on the violin, gave much pleasure. Mr. T. W. Attwood gave some cornet solos and duets with Mr. F. Williamson (flautist), and added greatly to the pleasure of the evening.

Mr. Harry E. Warner, the Organist of the Parish Church, Kew, gave an Organ Recital on the 26th ult., in aid of the Organ Fund, when his interpretation of selections from Bach, Paradies, Dussek, Haydn, Chauvet, Mendelssohn, and Guilmant was much appreciated. The choir, which is one of the best in the neighbourhood, was assisted by Mr. Sydney Beckley and Mr. J. H. Parker. A "Half-hour's Sacred Music" is now given at this church once a month after the evening service, when large congregations remain to listen to selections from oratorios, anthems, and organ solos.

At St Stephen's, South Kensington, Harvest Festival Services were held in connection with the Festivals of SS. Simon and Jude and All Saints'. For the Anthem Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" was sung, and for the Service Stainer in A, accompanied with orchestra and organ. The soloists were Master Warwick Major, Master Archibald Frazer, and Mr. Frederick Cundy, members of the choir; the Organist on both occasions was Mr. John E. Vernham, of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge; the Conductor being the Organist and Choirmaster of St. Stephen's, Mr. Hamilton Robinson.

A statement having been made in print àpropos of young Hofmann's performances, that "although playing upon a Bechstein piano he had no great partiality therefore," the boy's father addressed a letter rebutting this statement, and adding among other things that his son "has such an admiration for these pianos that whenever a Bechstein can be obtained he absolutely refuses to play upon any other instrument." This is certainly a forcible tribute to the character of the instruments, and one which must be highly gratifying to the celebrated makers.

A successful Concert was given at Willoughby Road Wesleyan Chapel, Hornsey, on the 8th ult. The works performed were Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" and the new Cantata "Faith Triumphant," by G. F. Root. In the former the solo was sung by Madame Barter. The soloists in the latter work were Miss Newton, Mrs. Cross, Mr. Croager, and Mr. Bradford. The choral numbers, rendered by the chapel choir, met with appreciation from an enthusiastic audience. Mrs. Jarrett and Miss Kilner accompanied on the piano and American organ respectively. Mr. J. R. Kilner, the Organist, conducted.

A new organ, erected by Messrs. Brindley and Foster, was opened on the 1st ult., in St. Saviour's Church, Denmark Park. The organ has three manuals, thirty-two stops, and thirteen couplers and composition pedals. It has tubular pneumatic action throughout. Recitals were given after all the evening services through the octave by the Organist, Mr. W. J. Kipps, which were listened to with great attention and interest by large congregations. The singing of the choir was under the direction of the Rev. W. H. Wilkins, Precentor and Choirmaster.

A Concert was given at the Town Hall, Brentford, on Wednesday evening, the 2nd ult., by Mr. Frank Austin, Organist of the Parish Church. Miss Bessie Stephens, Miss Cornelia Page, Mr. A. Probert, and Mr. Thomas Kempton were the vocalists, and gave general satisfaction by their efforts. Miss Clara Titterton gained great applause for her performance of violin solos by Spohr and Papini, exhibiting thorough command of the instrument. Mr. Austin accompanied throughout, and also contributed piano solos.

The Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "Samson" in Tolmers Square Congregational Church, on the 9th ult., and one of "Jephtha" in St. Bride's Church, Fleet Street, on the 16th ult. For "Samson" the soloists were Miss Marianne Rea, Mrs. Oram, Mr. Reginald Groome, Mr. Horace Stuart, and Mr. C. Beaumont Barr. For "Jephtha," Mrs. Stanesby, Miss Spring Rice, Mr. Edward Branscombe, and Mr. James Blackney. Mr. E. H. Turpin accompanied on the organ at both performances.

A most successful entertainment was given on the 17th ult, by Miss Nellie Harwood, of the Guildhall School of Music, at St. John's Hall, Hammersmith. The proceeds were devoted to the Dinner Fund for Poor Children. The following artists assisted:—Mesdames Minnie Gwynne, Nellie Harwood; Messrs. Alfred Peach, Attwater, and Wilson; violin, Master Webster; violoncello, Master Webster; pianoforte, Mrs. Webster. Mr. Webster conducted.

A most successful Concert was given on the 23rd ult. at the Kensington Town Hall, for the benefit of the Postmen's Convalescent Home, Brighton. The following artists appeared: Mesdames Hutchinson, Minnie Gwynne, Frances Hipwell, Nelly Levy, Adelina Dinelli; Messrs. W. G. Reynolds, Ernest Williams, Clements, and Douglas Pott. Mr. T. Barrow Dowling, R.A.M., Organist of St. Philip's, Regent Street, conducted.

The Vocal Union gave their sixth Concert in the Reading Room, Ilford, on Thursday evening, the 10th ult. Haydn's "Creation" was the work chosen. The principals were Miss Kate Nicholls, Mr. George Micklewood, and Mr. James Blackney. The accompaniments were played upon the pianoforte and harmonium by the Misses Kate and Eva Haynes. Mr. Alfred Storr conducted.

On St. Cecilia's Day, Massenet's "Cid" was performed, with great success, for the first time in Vienna. New decorations and costumes of great beauty contributed towards the success. The duet in the third act was much applauded. Winkelmann, the tenor, sang his part to perfection, and with the other performers was called twenty-nine times before the curtain. The ballet also was much applauded.

On Wednesday, the 9th ult., Mr. G. F. Sanders gave another of his entertainments in the Hall of the Congregational Church, Blackheath, for the benefit of the poor of Greenwich, Deptford, &c., which was much appreciated by a large audience. The following artists gave their services:—Mesdames Minnie Gwynne, Emily Dones, and Mrs. Edgar Neve (reciter); Messrs. Orlando Morgan, Walter Haslam, and G. Beaman.

One of Sir George Macfarren's latest compositions, a Romance for violin and pianoforte, will appear in The Girls' Own Paper for December. In the November part of the same paper is an excellent article by Miss Anna Williams, entitled "My Musical Training, or what I did with £100," in which her early musical studies are described in a manner at once interesting and instructive.

At the People's Palace, on the 9th ult., a very successful Concert was given under the direction of Mr. Orton Bradley. The vocalists were Miss M. H. Fulton, Miss Amanda Aldridge, Mr. G. S. Aspinall, and Mr. Thurley Beale. Miss Adela Duckham, violinist; and at the pianoforte, Miss E. J. Golledge. Miss Adela Duckham, in addition to her violin solo, played a pianoforte duet with Mr. Orton Bradley.

On the 14th ult. a Concert was given at St. Clement's Schools, Barnsbury, by Major J. W. Hale, his choir of boys and girls acquitting themselves very creditably in Crowe's Waltzes, "Gypsies" and "English Beauties." The solo vocalists were Miss Rosa Lonsdale, Misses E. and L. Arnold, Mr. F. Gwynne, and Mr. Conrad Formes. Miss L. Sault and Mr. B. B. Barrett were the accompanists.

Mr. E. H. Turpin gave a Recital on the new three-manual organ (built by Mr. Slater, of Bow) of the Forest Gate New Congregational Church, on the 23rd ult., and the Forest Gate Choral Society sang selections from Haydn's "Creation." The solos were taken by Miss Lawrence, Mrs. Mellis, and Messrs. Mitchell, Mellis, Giles, and Tobin. Mr. J. B. Mellis conducted.

The Electro-Harmonic Society gave a Smoking Concert in the Banquet Room, St. James's Hall, on October 28. The vocalists were Mr. H. W. Schartau, Mr. Edward Dalzell, Mr. Arthur Thompson, and Mr. Winn. Mr. Jeffries accompanied. Recitations were given by Mr. Charles Fry.

The National Society of Professional Musicians (South-Eastern section) will hold its annual conference on January 3 and following days, 1888, in London, when, besides meetings for discussion of musical topics, there will be Concerts of MS. and published music by the members.

The Technics of Pianoforte Playing. Musical Ornamentation. Manual of Tone-production in Pianoforte Playing. By Heinrich Germer.

[Leipzig: C. F. Leede. London: Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Herr Germer has, in a relatively short time, acquired a considerable reputation as a musical pedagogue of the advanced school in Germany. His "Die Technik des Klavierspiels," first published in 1877, has already run through six editions, and the complementary treatises which followed it—viz., "Die musikalische Ornamentik" and "Wie spielt man Klavier?"—have met with a similarly extensive practical recognition on the part of professional teachers and amateurs alike. In these works the author, himself a teacher of considerable practical experience of the instrument, embodies, as it were, in a concentrated form the achievements of the present century in the domain of pianoforte playing. Since the days of Hummel and of Kalkbrenner enormous onward strides have been made in the development of the technique appertaining to the instrument, a development which may be briefly summed up in the names of Tausig, Liszt, and Von Bülow. The advance made by these eminent virtuosi in the treatment of the pianoforte, the—to mention only one important item in the grand total of results—entire revolution wrought by them in the matter of fingering, have to be reckoned with, and can no longer be safely ignored in modern instruction books worthy the name. As a matter of fact, however, the number of "Pianoforte Schools" published in the present day attacking the subject at all, and in systematic manner is, as yet, a very small one, and this circumstance alone easily accounts for the popularity obtained by Herr Germer's contributions to the teaching literature of the instrument. In issuing the present English edition of the latter, comprising in one handy volume the two first-quoted works, under the respective titles of "The Technics of Pianoforte Playing" and "Musical ornamentation," as well as an important section of the third treatise—"Wie spielt man Klavier?"—dealing with touch, and here entitled "Tone-production in pianoforte playing," the publishers will doubtless find their enterprise rewarded by success. With a thorough mastery of his subject, the author combines the comparatively rare qualities of lucidity of exposition and a most rational arrangement and condensation of his material. The latter qualification applies, of course, more particularly to the "Technics" or instruction book proper, with its numerous finger exercises and other material for study, all of these being admirably selected for the purpose, and with a view also to economising the pupil's time and strength. "The author," says a paragraph contained in the preface to this part, "had in view, as leading fundamental idea, the division, after the analytical method, of the entire mechanism of the modern art of pianoforte playing into its principal factors, and thus the procurement for the student of an apparatus for hand and head, which enables him to fulfil, in every respect, the technical requirements to which the pianist is usually subject." This then is the certainly high aim of Herr Germer's "Technics," to which the manual concerning "Tone-production" forms a necessary supplement; while that on "Ornamentation" deals with musical graces and embellishments from an historical standpoint, and is probably the most exhaustive and interesting treatise ever published on the subject. The translator has discharged his by no means easy task on the whole very well, the above-quoted sentence being, however, scarcely a fair specimen of his important share in the volume. We sincerely trust that, in their English garb, Herr Germer's manuals will soon gain as many friends in the ranks of professors and earnest students of the pianoforte in this country as they have so quickly succeeded in obtaining in the author's native land.

Three Seasons. A Cantata. Composed by Carl Maria von Weber. English version by G. E. Troutbeck.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

Those who are fond of tracing coincidences may note that the year of the production of this charming work (1821), to which the title of "Three Seasons" has been given, was also that of the composition of the opera "The three Pintos." Sixty-six years after they had been written they have been brought before the public notice. Further than this nothing need be said concerning any parallel which may exist. The music of "The three Pintos" is, as yet, strange to the British public. The music of the "Three Seasons" is at the command of all by virtue of the present edition, which has been adapted to English words by Miss G. E. Troutbeck. The original words, "Du, bekränzend uns're Laren," were addressed probably to the Duchess Maria Amalia von Zweibräcken, sister of H.R.H. Frederick Augustus I. the King of Saxony, for whose birthday the Cantata was composed. It is written for soli, chorus, flute, and pianoforte, and was one of several produced by Weber for the Royal House. It was first performed at Pillnitz on September 26, 1821, the composer presiding at the pianoforte. The soloists were Fräulein Funk, Frau Haase, Herr Bergmann, and Herr Mayer, the flute part being taken by the celebrated virtuoso Herr A. B. Fürstenau. Among the chorus were the artists Mesdames Hükker and Huntand, Herren Keller and Wilhelmj. The libretto was furnished by Freidrich Kind, the author of the book of "Der Freischütz," and the music was produced in that happy period which saw the success of "Der Freischütz," "Preciosa," and the Concertstück in F minor. The special character of the words made the music unavailable for any other occasion than that for which it was written, therefore it was laid aside. However, Weber used the theme of the last chorus as the first Finale in "Euryanthe," and on other of the numbers of the score he wrote in pencil some of the words of the text of that opera. The Cantata was published in 1879, with new German words by Herr Carl Banck, by permission of H.M. King Albert of Saxony, who held the MS., and with the consent of Herr Max von Weber, the son of the composer, and it now appears in an English dress similar in pattern to that provided by Herr Banck, and in a form likely to be most acceptable to the admirers of Weber's music in our own country. Some necessary changes were made by Herr Banck for his new adaptation, and these have been followed in the present edition. The whole work consists of eight numbers, each marked by that brightness of treatment and freshness of melody which is Weber's characteristic quality. The opening chorus, "Up, for winter is departing," descriptive of the first season "Spring," which begins after a short prelude of four bars, has some effective soli passages, and though the whole number is no more than thirty-three bars long, it is full of interest. A most elegant and graceful song for soprano, "Say what is lovelier," the second number, is more extended in length, and brings with its extension an access of beauty. The pianoforte part in this and in the succeeding number, "'Tis time to be gone," is most beautifully written, and the parts for the two voices—bass and soprano—are well laid out for effective singing. No. 4, "Come, while suns are bright," representing the second season "Summer," is in canon form. No. 5, "Maidens and youths," is a quasi-recitative for tenor, introducing No. 6, the third season "Autumn comes," for soli, trio, and chorus. This, one of the most attractive numbers of the work, is certain to be very effective when carefully sung. No. 7, "Along the shores," recitative and arioso for tenor or soprano, the melody of which precedes the Finale "Bells they are ringing," is already well known as "Fröhliche Klänge," a portion of the Finale of the first act of "Euryanthe." There are, of course, considerable variations in the treatment of the subject in the two works, yet each appears to be exactly fitted for its purpose, and the similarity may well be passed over. There is no need to find fault with a composer for quoting himself. As a whole, the Cantata is most interesting and attractive, and will be worthy of an honoured place in the répertoires of Choral Societies. Those who desire to reproduce the exact effect intended by the composer have only to add the flute part to the pianoforte accompaniment, and the result can be attained without any great trouble or expense.

The Voice of Praise for Sunday School and Home, with Tunes. [Sunday School Union.]

THE object of the compilers of this copious collection has been to produce in one book, at a minimum price, a greater number of hymns for youthful worship and praise than is contained in any other work of a similar kind. There are over 700 pages in the book, so that the quantity is liberal, and the tunes are printed in music type and Tonic Sol-fa notation, so that those who do not sing from music may be placed at no disadvantage with those that do. The general character of the tunes is admirable, though the design of making a big book has led to the admission of much that might have been omitted under different circumstances. Some of the tunes, though musically weak, have become, as it were, classical by long use and association; others there are, and these either of American origin or in imitation of the modern American style, which show how thin is the division between the sacred and the secular in the music. Some have the rigid, yet dignified harmonies of the old Puritan period, others are "as merry as a ballad with its jingle and refrain." They may serve to lighten the hearts of the young, but they also may give rise to erroneous impressions as to the solemnity of sacred music, and lead to the formation of an incorrect judgment concerning the character of what is fittest in music associated with words of sacred import. It is both right and proper that children should learn to sing merry songs, and so gain a bright view of their religious duties; but are they not likely to estimate the character of the words by the style of the music? The whole question is one of serious educational, not to say religious import. As far as the general production of the book is concerned, it is worthy of all praise, for it is well printed, and is remarkably cheap.

Novello's Part-Song Book (Second Series). No. 540. The Rosy Dawn. A Pastoral for Mixed Voices. By C. H. Lloyd. No 542. Radiant Sister of the Day. By Rosalind F. Ellicott. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE art of writing vocal music with due regard to the needs and capacities of singers is one of the distinguishing characteristics of the foremost among our English musicians in the present day. There are few who understand the art better than the composer of this charming and graceful work "The Rosy Dawn." There is no sacrifice of melodiousness for the sake of exhibiting scholarship, but it is impossible to ignore the fact that the author knows how to deal with his material in a scientific manner. Here is art without artificiality, and freedom of treatment without carelessness. The Pastoral was written for the Cheltenham Musical Festival in October last, and it will be strange if it does not find its way into the repertories of many Choral Societies in other parts of the kingdom.

Though here and there may be found in Miss Ellicott's cleverly written and melodious part-song, some passages which recall the treatment of Henry Smart and Franz Abt, they are but indications perhaps of the predilection of the composer for the forms in which those composers delighted. There is nothing that could be taken as copied, though certain of the phrases show that the style of the composer is not yet fixed. The ability, fancy, and musical taste displayed ought to command attention for this and like works from the same pen. The vocal character and the sprightliness of the independent pianoforte part will make the part-song pleasing to those who are called upon to sing it.

FOREIGN NOTES.

THE centenary of the first performance (at Prague) of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" was worthily celebrated on October 29 throughout the Fatherland. Prologues, scenic representations of an allegorical character, and other festive arrangements preceded in many cases the jubilee performance of the immortal work itself, while at not a few operatic institutions the entire series of the master's recognised operas had been included in the commemorative proceedings. At Berlin, Dresden, Leipzig, Munich, Frankfurt, &c., "Don Juan" was given with the time-honoured (albeit very indifferent) German version of Da Ponte's libretto; while at Vienna, Prague, Hamburg, and other leading stages, the new German text of Herr Kalbeck had been adopted; the Hamburg performance, more especially, under Dr. Hans von Bülow's direction, having been a most memorable and excellent one. At Prague, Mozart's chef-d'œuvre was given in its original Italian version (with Signor Padilla in the title-rôle) on October 29, and on the following evening in German; the two performances being followed by a complete cycle of the master's remaining operatic works.

A commemorative tablet has been affixed, under the auspices of the German Male Quartet Society of Prague, to the house "Zu den drei Löwen," where Mozart resided on the occasion of his stay at the Bohemian capital in 1787.

A libretto to Mozart's "Zauberflöte," in the Czech language, has just been published at Prague, from the pen of Herr Novotny. The plot of this new version, while deviating considerably from Schickaneder's text, is said to be, however, scarcely an improvement upon the original, which, with all its faults, is by no means so unworthy a production as some of its deriders would make us believe.

In consequence of the great success which attended the Mozart Festival held at Salzburg this year, the directors of the Mozarteum have decided to hold a similar festive gathering in the master's birth-town in August next. Dr. Hans Richter, as Conductor, and many leading artists, have again signified their intention to co-operate on that occasion. A portrait of Mozart when fourteen years of age, by the painter Leopold Bode, has recently been added, by bequest, to the treasures of the Mozarteum.

On November 15, one hundred years had elapsed since the death, at Vienna, of Christoph Wilibald Ritter von Gluck. The day was commemorated in various ways by lyrical establishments and concert institutions in Germany and Austria; at Dresden by the specially prepared performance of a number of the master's epoch-making music dramas; at Berlin by the performance, on the part of the Philharmonic Choir, of a series of scenes from "Orpheus," with Madame Joachim interpreting the title part.

Miss Fanny Davies, the gifted English pianist, has won golden opinions from the Berlin public at Recitals given by her last month in that capital.

Wagner's only Symphony, written when he was nineteen years old, was performed for the first time at Berlin, by the Wagner Verein, last month, and is making the round of German Concert-rooms generally, the permission to perform the work in public having been granted only for the space of twelve months by the poet-composer's heirs.

The Liszt Society of Leipzig gave a Concert on October 22, at the old Gewandhaus, in celebration of the anniversary of the late pianist-composer's birth, which occurred on that day. The programme was devoted exclusively to Lisztian music, conducted by Capellmeister Nikisch. An interesting brochure, entitled "Franz Liszt als Lyriker," from the pen of Herr Bernard Vogel, being an ably written essay on the importance of Liszt as a song-writer, was distributed among the audience on this occasion, which was marked by a display of much enthusiasm on the part of a numerous audience.

Both at Leipzig and at Cassel the recent first production of Peter Cornelius's charming comic opera "Der Barbier von Bagdad," met with a highly favourable reception. The work is now making the round of German lyrical establishments.

A new dramatic Symphony, entitled "King Lear," by Herr L. Heidingsfeld, was exceedingly well received on its recent first performance at the Berlin Concerthaus.

Herr Goldmark has completed a new Symphony, which will be performed during the present season at Dresden, under the direction of Capellmeister Schuch.

A "School of violin-making" has just been opened at Schwerin, under the patronage of the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg. This is the first institution of its kind established in Germany since the extinction of the ancient guild of "Lautenmacher" (lute-makers), which had its principal seat at Nuremberg, during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

In consequence of defective arrangements in the electric lighting apparatus, the Vienna Opera House has been closed, and will probably not re-open for some weeks to come, greatly to the dismay of opera-goers, and of composers whose works are awaiting a first performance.

At the Cologne Stadt-Theater, "Flora Mirabilis," the successful Italian opera by Signor Spiro Samara, was produced, for the first time in Germany, on the 7th ult., with a German version of the libretto by Oscar Berggruen, and was well received. The work had been splendidly mounted, and the music is characterised in the press organs as pleasing and melodious, though lacking in dramatic energy.

The International Music Exhibition to be opened in May next (in connection with the Jubilee celebrations at the University of Bologna) will comprise musical instruments, both modern and antique; scarce and otherwise interesting editions of musical works, historical and bibliographical works, and scientific instruments and apparatus bearing upon the art. There are also contemplated model performances, illustrating the progress of music, vocal and instrumental, from Palestrina to the modern symphonic masters, for which purpose the admirable local music institutions of Bologna will come into requisition, while the names of Giuseppe Verdi and Arrigo Boïto on the committee of management are a sufficient guarantee of the thoroughness with which the project is likely to be carried out.

The Dal Verme Theatre, of Milan, announces a brilliant season of Opera next Carnival. Two new operas by Neapolitan composers will be brought out here—viz., "Le Trappole d'amore" by the Maëstro Oronzio Scarano, and "Il Testamento dello zio" by the Maëstro Galapi.

The San Carlo Theatre of Lisbon inaugurated its present season last month with a performance of Gounod's "Faust," in which a new tenor, Senhor de Andrade, a native of Lisbon, made his successful début.

Herr Franz Rummel, the eminent pianist, gave a highly appreciated interpretation last month at Rotterdam of Beethoven's Concerto in E flat and Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia, at a Concert under the direction of Professer Gernsheim. The Rotterdamsche Courant speaks in eulogistic terms of the performance in question.

A competition of Dutch choral societies was announced to take place at the end of last month at Utrecht, MM. Hol, Gernsheim, de Lange, de Hartog, and Verhulst being the members of the jury.

Signor Tamagno, who created the rôle of Otello at Milan, has been engaged by the impresario Ferrari for his South American tour, in the course of which fifty performances of Verdi's new opera are to be given, for which the Italian tenor has been guaranteed the sum of 700,000 francs, being an average of 14,000 per night.

A new opera by Peter Tschaikowsky, "The Enchantress," was performed on the 3rd ult. at St. Petersburg, and met with a most enthusiastic reception.

A new opera, entitled "Loreley," by the Danish composer, Herr Johann Bartholdy, was recently performed at Copenhagen, and achieved a complete success.

M. Lamoureux has been ordered by the Paris Tribunal of Commerce to pay the sum of 10,000 francs (instead of the 234,000 francs claimed) to the lessees of the Eden Theatre for non-fulfilment of contract owing to the withdrawal of "Lohengrin" from that stage.

M. Victor Wilder has just added "Siegfried" to the number of his admirable versions of the books of Wagner's music-dramas in the French language. The pianoforte score of this part of the Tetralogy, with M. Wilder's translation, is about to be published at Brussels.

Mr. Alexander Thayer, the Beethoven biographer, has just celebrated his seventieth birthday at Trieste, where, until very recently, he occupied the post of Consul-General for the United States Government. Mr. Thayer is now engaged upon the completion of the fourth (and final) volume of his highly meritorious work on the great Bonn master.

At Offenbach died, on October 29, Johann August André, for many years the chief of the well-known old-established music publishing firm of Johann André, aged seventy-one.

At Prague died, on October 27, Anton Apt, the founder of the Cecilia Society of that town, and a zealous promoter of Wagnerian art in the Bohemian capital, to the musical Conservatorium of which he has bequeathed his not inconsiderable fortune. Apt was a personal friend of the late poet-composer, whom he frequently visited when living in exile at Zurich.

The death is also announced at Rieti (Italy) of Matteo Salvi, a meritorious composer both for the church and for the stage, one of the first pupils of Verdi, and for some years past the director of the Liceo Musicale of Bergamo, near which town he was born in 1816.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SINKING IN PITCH.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me a few remarks. I have found during thirty years' experience that, with the exception of cathedral and a few church choirs, the habit of sinking in pitch, or the performance of the descending scale, as it may be called, in the Confession, Absolution, &c., has become an almost incurable evil. In vain do choirmasters emphasise the tone note and drill the boys hours at a time, yet the moment the service commences, to the grief and chagrin of the choirmaster the descending scale is performed as before, so that there has hitherto, seemingly, been no remedy. I have had an opportunity lately of visiting some churches where ladies are admitted to assist the choir, and in every such instance, throughout the whole service, the pitch has been strictly maintained. In one church in particular in my own district the "Ave Verum" (Mozart) was sung unaccompanied a few Sundays since, strictly in tune to the end. The query which I should like to have answered is—Are ladies' voices more reliable than boys'? If so, and the maintenance of pitch and tunefulness is desirable, why not admit them in our church choirs? Would it be asking too much to request some of the choir-trainers or organists to give their experience and opinions upon the matter?

Yours truly,

Bret Miller.

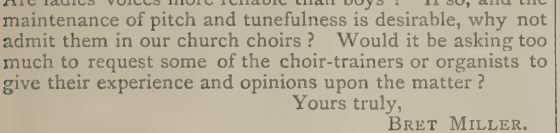
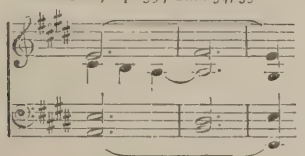
TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

Sir,—May I add two more examples of consecutive fifths to those quoted in your October number? They are rather curious, as being perpetrated by Chopin, the most sensitive and refined of pianoforte writers. But I fear that you will consider them so dangerous as examples for young writers that you will be unwilling to print them, for they certainly sound most beautifully. They are these:—

Op. 25, No. 8; bars 19, 20.



Scherzo, Op. 39; bars 54, 55.



Very truly yours,

A. F.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

Ashburne, Derbyshire.—The Amateur Orchestral Society gave its first Concert (second season) on the 8th ult. The programme included—Overture, Samson (Handel); Beethoven's Symphony in C, No. 1, and his Romanza in G, for violin and orchestra; Mendelssohn's Overture, Son and Stranger, his Rondo Capriccio in B minor, for pianoforte and band, and Cornelius March. Mr. Windeyer Clark, of London, was solo pianist, and performed the Rondo, in which he was well supported by the orchestra. The orchestra, supplemented by help from neighbouring towns and from London, consisted of seventeen strings, and the full complement of wind, &c. Mr. Peck, of Sheffield, was leader, and Mr. W. H. Tutt, Mus. Bac., conducted. Songs were sung by Mr. B. H. Grove.

Blackburn.—An Organ Recital was given by Mr. C. Swindlehurst, Organist of Christ Church, on October 29. The programme included pieces by Mendelssohn, Gustav Merkel, Alex. Guilmant, J. S. Bach, Meyerbeer, Handel, Sir A. Sullivan, Batiste, and M. Watson.

Brighton.—The Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society gave the concluding Concert of their forty-second season at the Dome, Royal Pavilion, on the 10th ult. The work performed was Costa's Eli. The soloists were Miss Robertson, Miss Frances Hipwell, Mr. Vernon Rigby (who made a welcome re-appearance in public), Mr. Vaughan Edwardes, and Mr. C. H. Buckman, and they achieved great success in their respective parts. Mr. W. Baker and Mr. F. Butler, F.C.O., rendered valuable assistance as leader and organist respectively. The orchestra and chorus of the Society had been brought to a state of great efficiency, and reflected great credit on Mr. Robert Taylor, who conducted with his usual skill.

Burnley.—Madame Patey and Miss Davies, with an accomplished Concert party, paid another visit on October 24, when their efforts were highly appreciated.——On the 10th ult. M. Aug. Wiegand (Ostend) opened the new organ built by M. Charles Anneessens for the Congregational Chapel, Barrowford. The programme included works by Mendelssohn, Schubert, Bach, &c., various numbers of which displayed the instrument to advantage.——On the 12th ult. forty members of Mr. Massey's Choir gave selections from Elijah and The Golden Legend, interspersed with solos by M. Wiegand.——Short Recitals are now given after Evensong, at St. Matthew's Church, by Mr. J. E. Gaul, the Organist and Choirmaster.

Chertsey.—On the 3rd ult. a new organ (dedicated to the memory of the late Rev. I. J. Chalkley) was opened in the Congregational Church, when some selections from Gaul's Holy City were performed, under the direction of Mr. Fred. Monk, Organist of Holy Trinity, Lyne, who also gave Recitals in the afternoon and evening from the organ works of Handel, Mendelssohn, Silas, Capocci, and Wély, and Best's transcription of Haydn's Romanza from "La Reine de France" Symphony. The instrument, built by Mr. J. Porritt, of Leicester, contains two manuals and pedal. Great organ, six stops; swell organ, seven stops; pedal, one stop and four couplers.—— On the 23rd ult. a Concert was given at the Drill Hall, in aid of the funds of the Conservative Working Men's Club, when an orchestra, led by Mr. J. S. Liddle, Mus. Bac., of Newbury, played Gade's "Hochland" Overture, Allegretto from Haydn's Military Symphony, and Watson's "Queen's Jubilee March." Mr. Liddle played the Andante and Finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto very finely, and was deservedly encored, giving Raff's Cavatina in D in response. The Rev. Dr. Huntingford also gave much pleasure by his rendering of two morçeaux by Thomè, for violoncello, and an enjoyable feature was the production of a new operetta written and composed by Louisa Gray, entitled "Between two stools," the characters being well played by Mr. Herbert J. Leigh-Bennett and Mr. G. P. Hawtrey. Mr. Fred. Monk was the Conductor of the Concert.

Chesterfield.—On Thursday, the 15th ult., an Organ Recital was given in the Catholic Church by Mr. W. W. Windle, Organist of Belper, who played works from Mendelssohn, Guilmant, Batiste, Smart, Pleyel, &c., concluding with his own March in C.

Corbridge.—The Choral Society, which was inaugurated about twelve months ago gave its first public performance on October 29, in the Town Hall. The work selected for the occasion was St. Cecilia's Day. From the opening chorus to the close of the work, the performers acquitted themselves in a manner which left little if anything to be desired. Madame Whatford, Misses Armstrong and Smith, and Messrs. Swinburne and Robson sang the solos, which were well received. The second part of the programme was of a miscellaneous description. Madame Whatford, Miss Catherine Bellas, and Mr. J. B. Bowes contributed their portion of the evening's entertainment in an able manner. The pieces sung by the Society were among the best features of the programme. Miss Carr officiated at the piano and Mr. John Bell at the organ.

Croydon.—On Tuesday, the 1st ult., Miss S. Emily Oldham gave her first Concert in Croydon at the small Public Hall. Miss Oldham put forward an attractive programme, and was assisted by Miss Adelaide Mullen, Miss Annie Layton, Madame de Fonblanque, Madame Helen d'Alton, Mr. Henry Beaumont, Mr. Gilbert Campbell, and Signor Mhanes. Mr. George Russell played two pianoforte solos in his well-known style, and the Concert-giver played two solos of her own composition, "In olden times" and "A passing thought." Mr. Claude Trevor and Miss Oldham were the accompanists.

Derby.—On the 8th ult. Mr. H. A. Wheeldon, Organist of Christ Church, Hendon, gave an Organ Recital in St. Luke's Church, before a numerous audience. The programme included selections from the works of Smart, Grison, Tours, Dubois, Hofmann, and Petrali.

Dunedin, N.Z.—The annual rehearsal of sacred song, instituted by Mr. Alfred Brunton, was given on September 27, the Garrison Hall being filled. Over 120 voices, representing the Dunedin and Port Chalmers classes, gave several choice selections. Two quartets, with chorus, were nicely rendered by Mesdames Strain and Logie, and Messrs. Brunton, Every, and Palmer. Madame Winter played a pianoforte selection in an appreciable style.

ECKINGTON, DERBYSHIRE.—On Sunday, the 6th ult., Dr. Stainer's Cantata Daughter of Jairus was given at the evening service in the United Methodist Free Church, by the choir. Mr. Fitton, the Organist, very ably presided at the organ. The work was very well rendered, and much appreciated by a large congregation.—On the 14th ult. the Sacred Cantata Captive Maid of Israel was performed in the Assembly Rooms, by the Eckington Amateur Harmonic Class, assisted by the Whittington Harmonic Class, and a full band. On the whole, the performance (which was under the conductorship of Mr. F. T. Bird) was very creditable. The solos were taken by Mrs. F. T. Bird, the Misses Turner, Spendlove, Whitworth, Barratt, Nicholson, and Messrs J. Bates, C. Mather, H. Turner Bryan, Gooden, and Master Harry Turner. Miss Helena Turner presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. G. H. Sadler at the large American organ.

HEBDEN BRIDGE.—The Harmonic Society commenced the season, on the 15th ult., by giving a performance of the Fairy Ring, by W. H. Cummings. The principals were Miss Marjorie Eaton (who took the part of Florina at a short notice, and sang with very good effect), Miss Batley, and Messrs. Buckland and Arnold. The quartet "Peace to the dreamer" (harp accompaniment, Miss Viola Trust) was beautifully sung. Miss Eaton, in the second part, sung "At my window," by Parker, and achieved a distinct success. The choruses were carefully given, and the Conductor, Mr. Eckersley, is to be congratulated on his training of the band.

HOLSWORTHY, N. DEVON.—A very successful Sacred Concert was given in the Wesleyan Chapel on the 10th ult. The programme consisted of anthems, songs, duets, and organ solos. The Anthems included Woodward's "The sun shall be no more thy light," Briant's "Come, let us reason," Williams's "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace," and Roberts's "Seek ye the Lord," the solo of which was most effectively sung by Mr. J. Dickson. Solos were also sung by Mrs. Cutting, Miss Dickson, Messrs. Higgs and Prout. Selections from Wély, Burnap, Sterndale Bennett, and Rossini were given on the organ by Mr. H. H. Bennett.

HOLTON, SOMERSET.—On Friday, the 4th ult., two Organ and Orchestral Recitals were given in St. Nicholas' Church, Holton, in aid of the Building Fund. An orchestra and chorus assisted. Mr. G. E. Lyle, Organist of Sherborne Abbey, presided at the organ. Pieces by Mendelssohn, Rossini, and Beethoven—with a "Te Deum" (G. E. Lyle), for choir, orchestra, and organ—Haydn, Callcott, Hewlett, and Scotson Clark were performed.

IRVINE, N.B.—Mr. Hinchliffe, Organist of the Parish Church, gave an Organ Recital in the church, on Friday, the 4th ult. He was assisted by the church choir, conducted by Mr. Allen, Choirmaster. The selections were excellent, and both organ and choir did ample justice to them. The programme was made up from the works of Wély, Ebdon, Mozart, Handel, Herold, Weber, Sir John Goss, J. Lemmens, Dr. Peace, Pinsuti, Balfe, Dr. J. Clarke Whitfeld, and Meyerbeer.

LADHOPE.—J. C. Grieve's Oratorio Benjamin was given in the Parish Church, Ladhope, on the 17th ult., conducted and accompanied by Mr. J. R. Brooke. The soloists were Misses Frier and Hunter, Messrs. Faichney, Todd, Brown, Crossland, and Mr. Metcalfe, of Carlisle Cathedral.

LINCOLN.—Mr. Barraclough's forty-fourth Concert took place in the Corn Exchange on the 1st ult. The performers were Mdlle. Rosina Isidor, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Charles Chilley, Mr. Farley Sinkins, and Signor Foli; solo piano, Madame Frickenhaus; violin, Signor Simonetti; contra-bass, Signor Bottesini; accompanist, Herr Volkmer.

NEWPORT, MON.—The Amateur Orchestral Society opened their twentieth season on Friday the 4th ult., when they gave at the Albert Hall, before a large and most appreciative audience, the first of a series of three Orchestral Concerts. The vocalists on this occasion were Miss Mary Bliss (soprano) and Mr. G. P. Reynolds (bass), the accompanist being Mr. A. Woolf Isaacson. The Conductor was Mr. E. Bernard Newman.

PETERBOROUGH.—A Concert, under distinguished patronage, was given by the Misses F. E. Barratt, at the Drill Hall, on the 8th ult. There was a large attendance, and amongst those present were the Mayor (H. P. Gates, Esq.), Mrs. Perowne, and several prominent citizens. The performers were the Misses Barratt, Mr. Prenton, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Romilly, Mr. Louis Brooke (violinist), and Miss L. Clarke, of Wisbech.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.—At the Irving Hall, on October 20, the first of four Chronological Musical Recitals was given by Mr J. H. Rosewald (violin) and Mr. S. Monroe Fabian (piano), assisted by Madame Julie Rosewald, Miss Carrie Millzner, and Miss Mary E. Barnard (vocalists), with Mr. Clarke W. Reynolds as accompanist. The first Recital consisted of pieces by Byrd, Bull, Couperin, Rameau, Biber, Bach, Handel, Murschauser, Carissimi, and Tartini, representing the English, French, German, and Italian Schools of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The performance was an evidence of the interest taken in the study of music on the Pacific coast.

SHERBORNE.—The organ in the Abbey was re-opened on Wednesday, the 9th ult., after having been cleaned and repaired by the builders, Messrs. Gray and Davison. Two new stops, clarabella and orchestral oboe, have been added, also new overhanging manuals and new straight pedal keyboard. Special services were held, at which the Abbey Choir and Organist were assisted by the Sherborne Military Band, who took part in the Anthems and Voluntaries with telling effect. A Festival setting by Mr. G. E. Lyle, the Abbey Organist, of the Te Deum, for choir, organ, and military band, was sung as the Anthem at the afternoon service. The evening Anthem was "I will give thanks," composed by Mr. E. Winchester, and arranged for the occasion by Mr. Lyle.

SLIGO.—The sixth season of the Musical Society was inaugurated, on the 3rd ult., by a performance of Acis and Galatea, under the direction of Mr. A. T. Froggatt. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous.

SOUTHPORT.—At the Orchestral Concert at the Winter Gardens, on the 12th ult., Mr. White's Concert-Overture Titania was one of the most attractive items. It showed that the composer has considerable versatility of expression, coupled with good descriptive power. The echo effects when the trumpets announce the arrival of Oberon were capitally conceived, and introduced in a most skilful manner, and the Finale—the assembly of the whole fairy court—was a piece of admirable descriptive work. The members of the band played, on the whole, well and steadily together, and their efforts were rewarded by well deserved applause. Mr. J. C. Clarke contributed three songs.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—The first Concert of the eighth season of Mr. John Barnby's series of Concerts was given before a large and most enthusiastic audience in the Exchange Hall on the 10th ult., at which the artists were Madame Valleria, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Orlando Harley, Mr. Maybrick Mons. Jules de Swert (violoncello), and Mr. Sydney Naylor (solo pianist and Conductor).

TORONTO.—Mr. J. W. F. Harrison, Organist of the Jarvis Street Baptist Church, gave two Organ Recitals therein on October 25 and the 1st ult. His programmes were selected from the works of Guilmant, Hainworth, Leschititzky, Ed. Amillon, Moszkowski, Wagner, Flotow, Handel, Mendelssohn, J. S. Bach, Fumagalli, Boscovitz, Dudley Buck, Charlton Speer, Jensen, W. T. Best, and Rossini. Miss Sutherland, Miss Eells, Mrs. Hall, Mr. Sims Richards, and Mr. Schuch were the vocalists, and M. F. Boucher contributed some violin solos.

TRINIDAD.—The Concert given in Greyfriars Church Hall, on October 22, proved a great success. The hall was well filled, and the Cantata, Britannia and her Daughters, was given in very creditable style. The choruses were sung by about seventy of the children attending Greyfriars School, and the solos, duos, and trios were sung by the members of the Greyfriars Church Choir. Mr. Adamson, on whom has rested the entire charge and labour of getting up this Concert, is to be congratulated on the success. The programme was repeated on Monday, October 31.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—A Matinée of classical chamber music was given at the Pump Room on October 29, by Mr. Henry Lahee, introducing to the notice of the public there the first quartet of lady professional instrumentalists that has been heard in England. The leader is Miss Emily Shinner, Miss Lucy Stone (second violin), Miss Cecilia Gates (viola), and Miss Florence Hemmings (violoncello). The programme included a grand Quartet in C minor (Op. 18), and Schumann's Quintet in E flat (Op. 44), in which Mr. Lahee was associated. In addition to these pieces there were some pianoforte solos by Mr. Lahee. The vocalist was Mr. Thorndike, whose rich and full baritone was heard to good effect in a German song by Gerard F. Cobb, composed specially for him, Maude V. White's "Devout Lover," and some MS. "Shakespeare Songs," by Mr. Lahee.

WERNETH.—The new organ in Brunswick Wesleyan Chapel, built by Messrs. A. Young and Sons, Manchester, was opened by Mr. R. H. Wilson on the 9th ult. His Recital consisted of pieces by Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Schubert, Guilmant, Batiste, and Lemmens.

WEST HARTLEPOOL.—Dr. Bridge's Oratorio Mount Moriah was given in St. James's Church, on the evening of the 2nd ult. The interpretation of the work reflected the greatest credit on Mr. James F. Hard, the Organist, and on the choir. The principal soloists were Masters. H. Williamson and Ernest Eden (soprano), Mr. Dobson and Master Willcox (alto), Mr. R. Wilson (tenor), and Mr. J. Thompson (bass). Mr. Watson Hunter, Choirmaster of St. Hilda's, conducted, and Mr. Hard presided at the organ.

WHITBY.—The Choral Society, which has been under the direction of Mr. Hallgate for the last six years, gave a good performance of the Rose Maiden, on the 1st ult., to a very large audience, in the fine new Temperance Hall. Growing local interest in the cause of music is attested both by increasing membership and by larger attendances at the Concerts of the Society. Mr. Henderson (Darlington) presided at the piano and Mr. T. J. Hoggett at the harmonium, very efficiently. The soloists were Miss Fanny Sellars, Miss Morris, Mr. Dunkerton (Lincoln), and Mr. Nutton (Durham).

WHITEHAVEN.—On the 23rd inst. an Organ Recital was given in Holy Trinity Church, by Mr. W. H. Bates, the Organist and Choirmaster. The following compositions formed the programme:—St. Ann's Fugue (Bach); Barcarole from the Fourth Pianoforte Concerto (Bennett); Cantilene Pastorale (Guilmant); Fanfare (Lemmens); Meditazione (Capocci); Air and Variations (Pearson); Andante (E. M. Lott); Fantasia Pastorale (Wély); Adagio and Andante to the First Organ Concerto (Handel). During the past four months the organ has been in the hands of Messrs. THE LORD REIGNETH

ROBERT PARKER PAINE.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

"The composer of this work is evidently well versed in the English School of Music, and his Psalm would make an extremely effective Anthem for festival occasions."—The Musical Times.

"'The Lord Reigneth' (Psalm xciii.), has been well set to music by Robert Parker Paine, with a baritone solo, three choruses, and two symphonies; it will prove a welcome addition to the 'Sunday Evening at Home.'"—The Graphic.

"Mr. Paine is already the composer of several works, but in none of his previous efforts, successful and meritorious as they have been, has he scored such a success as he did on Monday evening (The Windsor and Eton Choral Society), and that the audience was pleased with it was shown by the repeated calls for the composer."—Windsor and Eton Gazette.

"The Psalm is one of praise, and the composition gives full effect to the spirit of the words. The opening air, 'The Lord Reigneth,' was sung by Mr. Sutton Shepley in a masterly manner. There is a grandeur about the composition in harmony with the tone of the Psalm."—The Eton Express.

"At the concert of the Windsor and Eton Choral Society, Windsor, which was crowded, a new setting to the 93rd Psalm, composed by R. P. Paine, was performed for the first time. Without doubt there is very much that is really grand in it. The work is in four movements, and from first to last the idea of swelling grandeur in accordance with the text of the Psalm is insisted upon. The audience called for the composer, and the last chorus was repeated."—The Buckinghamshire Advertiser.

"A very successful setting. The opening solo (Baritone) is effective, and the choruses are bold and striking. The music is quite in keeping with the words."—Ecclesiastical Gazette.

CHOPE'S CAROLS FOR CHRISTMAS

WORDS AND MUSIC, TRADITIONAL AND MODERN

THE MODERN BY WELL-KNOWN AUTHORS AND COMPOSERS.

Price SIXPENCE; Post-free, 7½d.
The Book of Words only, ONE PENNY; in large type, Twopence each.

If it is permissible to say so, the Carol at Christmas especially appeals to the faith of the poor. It is the good news sung to the people. It is not a hard sermon preached by the Angel to the wise of this world, but the glad tidings sung to the men of good will. And what more helpful to poor mortals can there be than Glory sung to God? so that we know there can be no harm in listening to it; and Peace sung by a multitude of the heavenly host to man, so that we can be certain that it is a true peace about Him Who is our Peace and Reconciliation, and Who gives us a peace which the world cannot give when she sings to us, and which the world cannot take away when she ceases to sing and be pleasant to us.

This, then, is how the Carol helps us, one and all. For though it was heard first by the poor and simple, it yet was soon learned by wise men, and rich, and great and royal persons. God is the same now as then, and man in His sight and in His heart is as precious now as of old. How, therefore, can any shepherds of His flock longer forbear to let His people come and sing the Gospel Story of His Blessed Incarnation? How can the pastors of the Church refuse to restore the use of the joyous Carol in divine service, when the world has so many captivating songs to allure both young and old, and rich and poor—pleasant songs which leave their bitterness and sting behind them till death; when, too, the sects outside the Church are pouring forth from the press hundreds of thousands of so-called "sacred songs," to weaken or destroy the Faith as it is in Jesus? Let the Clergy ask themselves whether the singing of "Brady and Tate's" version, or even of the hymns found in ordinary hymn-books, is all that their people need or have a right to expect in the service of God. The cry of the day is "Reform." And will not even the poorest congregations be willing to contribute their penny to obtain a book of spiritual songs, to help them on their way Zionwards, if only the Church will thus unbend to make her services more popular as of old? Surely a small venture, a little trouble, is worth the taking, if only the people's heart can be drawn to love the Church more—and worship Him better Who came in lowliness and poverty to seek and to save the lost.

"The Carols are very successful, and extremely pleasing. As each season comes round one feels more and more convinced what a blessing it is to have carols, to make a change, and bring a little more warmth, and colour, and heartiness in our singing."—G. BIRD, Wolverhampton.

"I like the words of the Carols very much. I look forward with pleasure to the use of some of them in our church."—A. M. MORGAN, Mucking Vicarage.

"I am filled with admiration not only at the beauty of the Carols themselves, and of their perfect fitness for the use they are designed, but also at the mountains of difficulty which have been overcome to produce work so excellent; and the collections are brought out in a style of great beauty and marvellously cheap. They should be sold by the hundred thousand."—DAVID JONES, Wallington.

"I am sure that your book of Carols will be of great service."—E. SLATER-BROWNE, Sub-Dean of Salisbury.

NEW WORK.

ARRANGEMENTS for the Organ. By W. J. WESTBROOK, Mus. Doc. This work has been designed to meet the wants of those Organists who have to play organs more or less incomplete. The whole of the pieces may be played, therefore, upon organs with two keyboards; many of them, by a little management, upon organs with only one. The pedal is, of course, indispensable. It has been the aim to make all the pieces thoroughly playable, and as easy as was consistent with their due effect.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

NEW CANTATA
THE BRIDAL DAY
Dedicated by permission to Professor Sir GEORGE MACFARREN, M.A., Mus. Doc.
Written by FREDERICK B. NEEDHAM.
COMPOSED BY LEONARD BARNES.

MUSICAL TIMES.—The music is characterised by an easy flow of melody, and is expressive and musicianly. The work may be commended to the notice of singing-classes
MUSICAL WORLD.—The Overture and Opening Chorus are conceived, like many other passages, in the spirit of Sullivan, and it must be owned they would not disgrace the stage of the Savoy. It may be safely predicted that the work will attain considerable success.
THE BAZAAR.—The plot offers much scope for dramatic passion, and the Composer has shown that he knows how to take advantage of his opportunity in every case. We can cordially recommend this work to choral societies.
WEEKLY DISPATCH.—This is just the kind of work for choral societies.
THE QUEEN.—Much graceful music is included in this Cantata.
THE GRAPHIC.—This easy and tuneful work will please at a choral concert.

JOAN OF ARC

FREDERICK ENOCH

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; for, although its subject is so different, it is laid down very much upon the same lines, and contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."—Birmingham Daily Times.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. The music displays more skilful workmanship than any music we have received from the same hands. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."—Birmingham Daily Post.

"Now with matured experience and ripened scholarship he gives to the town which has received and welcomed his first triumphs his magnum opus, 'Joan of Arc.'"—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"The Cantata, from the first bar to the last, is rich in melody, beautiful harmonic combinations, and clever orchestration. The beautiful 'Ave Maria' is a splendid example of pure and fervent church music, but there are so many exquisite points of merit in Mr. Gaul's latest work that they hardly need detailing. Taking the work as a whole, it bids fair to become a great favourite with all choral societies."—Birmingham Weekly Post.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."—Manchester Guardian.

"The music from beginning to end is of the highest order, both in form, construction, dramatic expression, and religious colouring. Particularly beautiful is the great wealth of melody, which carries with it the impression that it is the outcome of the inspiration and genius of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.' . . . 'Joan of Arc' is one of the most melodious, refined, and expressive works that has come under our notice."—Huddersfield Examiner.

Price, paper covers, 2s. 6d.; ditto, boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Vocal parts, each 1s. Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100. (Ent. Sta. Hall.)

The gratuitous loan of Instrumental Parts may be had on application to the Composer, and full liberty is given to perform this Cantata and to insert the words in any programme without further permission.
